Wood? Gracious, no! It's modern Armstrong Linoleum

IT KEPT THE CHARM IN THE KERNS' OLD HOUSE, BUT CHASED AWAY THE CHORES

A skilled professional from the flooring store put down the floor in this remodeled kitchen. Mrs. Kern chose No. 5300 in Armstrong Embossed Linoleum. It has all the good looks of a real old plank floor. Yet it's practical and moderately priced.

There are no cracks between these handsome "planks" to trap spilled things. Made in six-foot-wide sheets, this floor has few seams, and they were so expertly joined when the floor was put down that they're invisible. Mrs. Kern never knew a floor could be so easy to keep clean.

"Like walking on air," says Mrs. Kern, about the comfort she gets from the layer of foam under her new floor. It's new Armstrong Cushion-Eze Underlayment. Cost her only a few dollars extra—but what luxury! See "Cushion-Eze" at your flooring store.

SEND FOR FREE ROOM PORTFOLIO describing the many ideas in this remodeled kitchen. Sketch plan and list of furnishings are included. Write Armstrong Cork Company, 5907 Atkins Ave., Lancaster, Pa. In Canada, Dept. 79, Box 919, Montreal, Quebec.

Looking for FURNITURE with a FUTURE?

Upholstered furniture by Ficks Reed Co., Cincinnati, Ohio

Then be sure it's cushioned with real AIRFOAM

You can't expect AIRFOAM's lasting good looks and style from anything less than AIRFOAM. Yet some think they can "save" by buying "foam" upholstery that isn't even rubber!

There's only one AIRFOAM, and Goodyear makes it. AIRFOAM is true rubber latex—foamed and formed and tailored to fit perfectly, beautifully, without sag or breakdown.

Millions of homemakers have found AIRFOAM holds its shape even after more than 20 years' hard use. Designers and manufacturers with the finest lines and finest names use Goodyear's exclusive AIRFOAM – choice of more people than all other cushionings combined!

When you invest in upholstered furniture – insist on seeing the AIRFOAM label. It's your assurance of "furniture with a future".

GIVE YOUR HOME A LIFT-FOR-LIFE WITH YORK AIR CONDITIONING

YORK Answers 7 Important Questions to Help You Get the Most Value and Satisfaction for Your Air Conditioning Dollar!

Questions on Cost

Q: Will adding a York Air Conditioner to an adequate warm air system save on installation costs?

A: It would save hundreds of dollars.

Q: Can we buy a combination heating and cooling system from York?

A: Definitely. And you would save substantially over separate installation of furnace and air conditioner.

Q: Are operating costs reasonable?

A: Yes. York conditioned homes in the average Southern community cost as little as 24¢ per day per horsepower. Northern areas average 50% less.

Q: How much will the system cost?

A: Figured on "time" payments, count on an average of twenty or thirty dollars per month, depending on your specific cooling problem.

Questions on Product

Q: In homes where space is at a premium, is there any alternative to having the whole system installed inside the house?

A: Of course. York has twin system models with a heat exhaust unit that may be placed outside your home.

Q: What capacity air conditioner will the average 5-room home require?

A: That depends—on room size, insulation, window exposure, etc. Your York dealer is the best qualified to answer this question for you.

Q: Whom do I call to take the first step toward installing our new system?

A: Your best guarantee of a quality installation lies in the proved integrity and reputation of your York Dealer. He's listed in the yellow pages of your phone book.

LOOK INSIDE BEFORE YOU BUY!

Before you settle on any air conditioning system, look inside! Compare features, quality, values! See how only York can offer you all the benefits of air conditioning: Faster cooling and 30% more humidity removal with exclusive Cooling Maze Coils... positive air filtration with heavy-duty long-life filters... longer peak performance with gas-cooled, Sealed-In-Steel Compressors... maximum operating economy with Twin Cooling Systems!

York Central Systems are available in a price and capacity to meet every need. Write for FREE "Look Inside" Comparison booklet to help you compare air conditioning systems and make the best selection. No obligation!

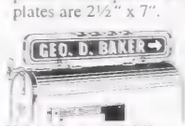
from coast to coast in America's finest residential areas you see more DAY-n-NIGHT Markers than any other kind of house marker

People who can afford any type of home identification choose low-cost DAY-n-NIGHT Markers. Good taste, simple design and honest craftsmanship have made DAY-n-NIGHT Markers America's favorites from coast to coast!

The perfect gift for birthdays—or any occasion—because it's personal! Gift card free on request.



ANY WORDING YOU WANT*

Your name or other wording appears on both sides of your DAY-n-NIGHT Marker in permanent, embossed reflector letters that shine brightly in headlights, softly in moonlight.

DAY-n-NIGHT Markers are rustproof; plates, frames, etc., are made of lifetime aluminum throughout. Baked enamel automobile finish; black background, white letters. The letters are permanent — raised in solid aluminum plates. Nameplates are 2½" x 18"; number plates are 2½" x 7".

You can order any wording you want, up to 17 letters and numbers on nameplates, 6 on number plates. Same wording appears on both sides.

COLOR! The background on any DAY-n-NIGHT Marker can be made in your choice of Antique Copper, Colonial Red or Pine Green for only 50¢ per Marker extra. The colors are baked enamel automobile finishes, with the same brilliant white reflecting letters as black-and-white styles.

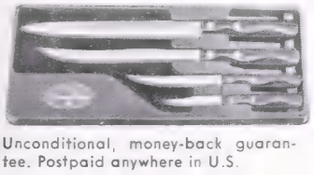
IMPOSSIBLE?



NO! These revolutionary knives actually WEAR SHARP!

The secret is in a new patented process developed by Union Carbide. Tungsten carbide is detonated on the stainless steel to form a "flame edge" of the hardest metal known to man. The union of these two metals results in an amazing self-sharpening action that assures you of safe, sure cutting for an incredibly long time. It's the first basic new concept in knives in more than 2000 years! All knife handles have contoured finger-grip design and are of plastic impregnated birch veneer impervious to heat, water, acids.

NEW! A FREEZER YOU NEVER HAVE TO DEFROST!

Frost never forms in this new General Electric Freezer with Frost-Guard Automatic Defrosting.

Now, General Electric brings you the most efficient freezer ever. Big feature is G.E.'s new Frost-Guard System that protects frozen food safely without frost build-up.

Frost never forms. That means you never have to defrost it. You never have to empty messy drip pans or chop away ice from locked-in foods. Frost-Guard does the work for you.

You get all these conveniences, too, in this new 13-cubic-foot Frost-Guard Freezer: bookshelf door convenience, famous G-E Straight-Line design . . . plus three big shelves, roomy swing-out basket for bulky foods, 20-can juice dispenser . . . choice of five General Electric Mix-or-Match colors—or white.

Other G-E Freezers also available in 10-, 11- and 18-cubic-foot capacities. See your General Electric dealer now.

Household Refrigerator Dept., General Electric Co., Appliance Park, Louisville 1, Ky.

FREEZER
13-CUBIC-FOOT

Frost-Guard System does your defrosting for you. No worry about frost build-up that locks food packages in and makes labels hard to identify. Everything is always neat and handy.

Bookshelf door puts everything where you can reach it easily without stretching or bending. You can store your frozen food packages in the door just as you do books on a shelf.

Economy of space. The Frost-Guard takes ½ the floor space of a chest-type freezer and stores all food within easy reach. G.E.'s Straight-Line Design fits flush with cabinets.

Children's furniture that makes every inch count

Danish pieces, designed to serve the most uses in the least amount of space, are also equipped to take rugged wear

Double duty: Turn this chair over, bringing the back forward, and you have a child's table. The contrast of the two rich-looking hardwoods used—teak for back and seat, oak for the frame—plus the fine detailing and fitting together of joints make this design by Denmark's Sven Ellekjaer a craftsman's piece. Add to that the bonus of a sturdy table. The natural oil finish needs only more oil rubbed over exposed surfaces to heal scars of rugged use. At Raymor, through decorators.

A square pine box, with one open side and long vents in the others to keep it light and airy, can be multiplied by as many units as are needed to furnish a child's room. Push four boxes together, cushion them, and there's a bed (left). Stack boxes or use singly for a table. Set boxes on a stand and top with a plank (above) and a child has a writing desk. Insert shelves and hang boxes on wall, as shown, and they hold a child's treasures. Designed by Denmark's Ib Hylander. In U.S., through George Tanier, Inc.

Desk and chairs (right) pull out of a "wardrobe" of beech, which provides a handy blackboard (above). Its frame becomes legs of desk. Chairs swing out as doors open. Design by Niels Kofoed. In U.S., through George Tanier, Inc.

Child's high chair of fumed oak, with natural wax finish that wipes clean, is design of Nanna and Jorgen Ditzel. Trick closure for use while baby needs to be penned in is a dowel with screw-tight tension that snaps in and out. Foot-rest adjusts. Made by Kold, Kerteminde. Imported by International Designers Group, Inc.

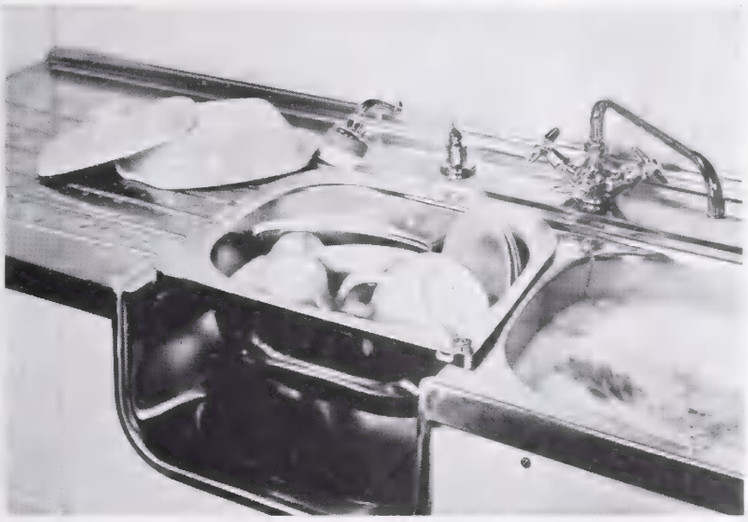
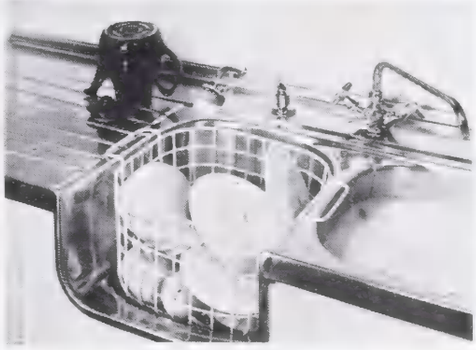
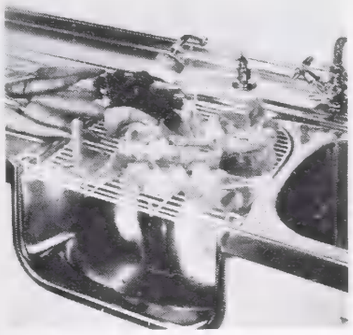
Sit-down work area achieved by use of large cutting board which pulls out from below counter top. Hardwood runners at two levels permit adjustment of board to height suitable for person seated on posture chair. Plastic-lined drawer, open, holds bread in reach.



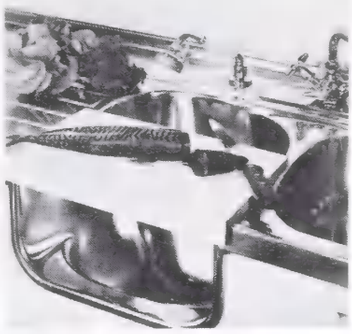
Design ideas from a Norwegian kitchen



Here is one ingenious way to provide a convenient sit-down work center for the kitchen



Mixing center is conveniently situated between sink and range to save steps. Open area below accommodates sit-down work counter shown at top of page. Corner space is utilized for storage by base cabinet with shelves attached to door which swings contents within easy reach as door is opened. Designed by Steinar Thomassen, for Nordia Kitchens, Oslo, Norway.



Housewives of Norway like the versatility of this double sink

Drain tray of plastic-coated wire, shown above at left, receives freshly washed greens and other vegetables. For cleaning fish or trimming meat, a chopping block slides easily into place, as shown at right. These and other sink fittings are stored conveniently in cabinet directly below.

Plastic-coated wire cover fits over regulation sink when not in use, to provide additional counter space. Single faucet swings over both sinks and includes diverter control for handled dishwasher brush mounted at left which pulls out on hose for use. Sink designed by Steinar Thomassen, Nordia Kitchens, Oslo, Norway.

Scandinavian music offers more than you think

By MARTIN BOOKSPAN

• Mention Scandinavian music to the average music lover and he will think first of two names: Edvard Grieg of Norway and Jean Sibelius of Finland. This is understandable, but the north country boasts more than two composers worthy of note. But let's give them their due, these are certainly the two titans in the history of the art in Scandinavia.

Who among us has not responded to the First Suite from Grieg's music for Peer Gynt, the play by his great countryman, Henrik Ibsen—music that is by turns naïve and charming, passionate and dramatic? And who, hearing the majesty and grandeur of Sibelius's Finlandia, can fail to identify with the national aspirations of a proud and defiant people?

But what of the other composers of Scandinavian music? Among Grieg's contemporaries and compatriots, Johan Svendsen and Johan Halvorsen must be singled out as men of talent and imagination too little acknowledged outside of their native land. And in present-day Norway there flourishes a whole crop of important composers, chief among whom are Fartein Valen, Harald Saeverud and Klaus Egge.

Four names loom large on the composing scene in Sweden: Hugo Alfven, Kurt Atterberg, Gosta Nystroem and Hilding Rosenberg. And Denmark has given us, among others, Hans Christian Lumbye, Knudage Riisager, and a giant, Carl Nielsen.

Johann Svendsen was an exact contemporary of Grieg's. He was born in 1840, three years before Grieg, and he died in 1911, outliving his more celebrated colleague by four years.

Between 1871 and 1877 Svendsen composed a number of important orchestral works, but then he allowed his attentions to be diverted from composition to conducting. Grieg considered this a grievous loss to the over-all musical life of Norway.

Svendsen's most significant works are two symphonies, four Norwegian rhapsodies, Carnival in Paris and Festival Polonaise, all of them composed before the appearance of the first important orchestral scores by Brahms and Dvorak.

In 1864, when Grieg was twenty-one, Johan Halvorsen was born. After studying the violin in Stockholm and Leipzig, Halvorsen returned to Norway and assumed several important conducting posts. He was married to a niece of Grieg, a union symbolic of the strong influence which the elder master exerted upon his own work throughout his lifetime.

Halvorsen is chiefly remembered for a colorful orchestral piece, Entrance March of the Boyards, and an arrangement for violin and viola of the Passacaglia from Handel's Harpsichord Suite in G Minor.

The output of Valen, Saeverud, and Egge reflects many of the trends of 20th-century composition. Valen, who died in 1952 at the age of sixty-five, embraced atonalism without ever adopting the 12-tone method of composition. Though he stood apart from all nationalist developments in Norway, he was sufficiently appreciated for his countrymen to form a Valen Society during the last year of his life.

Saeverud was born in the city of Grieg's birth, Bergen, in 1897 and began composing at a very early age. He has thus far produced seven symphonies, a cello concerto, an oboe concerto, and new incidental music for Ibsen's Peer Gynt.

Egge, a pupil of Valen's in composition, is also one of Norway's best-known music critics. Much of his output makes use of Norwegian national melodies cast in traditional classical forms.

The Dean of contemporary Swedish composers is the eighty-seven-year-old Hugo Alfven. He is also the only composer in this survey who has contributed a tune to the United States Hit Parade. This is the Swedish Rhapsody, first used as the background for a film on the Omnibus television program and then popularized in a recording by Percy Faith and his orchestra.

There are actually three Swedish rhapsodies for orchestra by Alfven; it is the first of them, called Midsummer Vigil, which got into the juke boxes. In addition, Alfven has written five symphonies, of which the most recent dates from 1952.

Kurt Atterberg achieved international renown in 1928 when his Sixth Symphony won the first prize in the Schubert centennial contest. He was awarded $10,000 by the Columbia Phonograph Company and his symphony was recorded by Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Success was turned to scandal some time later, however, when Atterberg declared that he had consciously imitated the styles of some composers on the jury (notably Glazunov, Alʹ no, and Nielsen) in an effort to court their favor. Atterberg's seven other symphonies, however, exhibit the same uninhibited romanticism that characterizes the winning score and most other Swedish music of the period.

Gosta Nystroem (born in 1890) and Hilding Rosenberg (born in 1892) are two Swedish composers who have gone in another direction. They both make use of ammunition from the arsenal of ultra-modernism, such as atonality, but neither is a slave to a method or a system.

And so we come to Denmark, where music has flourished for centuries. Danes were waltzing and doing the polka to some utterly captivating music by one of their own countrymen, Hans Christian Lumbye, years before the music of Johann Strauss the younger swept across the Continent.

Lumbye is sometimes called "The Waltz King of the North," and even today his music, with all its lighthearted sparkle, can be heard in Copenhagen's famous Tivoli Concert Hall, usually under Lumbye's grandson, Tippe.

Knudage Riisager (born in 1897), a prolific producer of music of satirical bent, is a notable composer of contemporary Denmark. The master of them all, however, is Carl Nielsen who only now, nearly thirty years after his death, is coming to be recognized as one of the mightiest of 20th-century symphonists.

Nielsen's early music was rather strongly influenced by Brahms. His later works, however, disclose a strongly personal intellect and a mighty mastery of the symphonic medium. His orchestration is opulent and rich in color and he was endowed with one of the great melodic gifts of our time. The crown of his achievement are six superb symphonies, the last three of which are among the most brilliantly original in the whole literature. Nielsen also composed two operas; violin, flute, and clarinet concertos.

Here, below, a sampler of the rich musical fare of Scandinavia—on records:

"My Thunderbird fits me," rejoices Miss Cole. "It's just my size. This makes so much difference in how you feel at the wheel. And how you handle yourself—and the car."

Anne Cole tells...

Why women love the new Thunderbird

The young and vivacious Vice-President of Cole of California commutes to her office (and crosses the country!) in her new Thunderbird

Anne Cole is one of the youngest, prettiest and most successful executives in the world of fashion. Her name and her swimsuits are known to fashion-conscious women all over the country. One of the rewards of success for Miss Cole is her new Thunderbird.

"It's a wonderful car," says Miss Cole. "When I'm in Los Angeles, I drive from my home to my office every day. It's only 20 miles—but you know L.A. traffic! Even so, I handle my T-bird as though I were the world's greatest driver, which I'm not. It's just that it's so easy to handle. It's so easy, in fact, that I drive from the Coast to New York twice a year. That's really traveling!

"What I mean is that other cars I've driven seem to have 'FOR MEN ONLY' signs on them. My Thunderbird says, 'ANNE COLE.' It's my car and I love it.

"My Thunderbird has flair!"

"It's a black convertible with a white top and it's beautiful. Personally, I think it's the smartest car on the road, with simple, classic understatement. If you don't like clutter, if you don't like busyness . . . you'll like the Thunderbird. But, as you know, I do like flair in design and the Thunderbird has great flair!

"The Thunderbird is so luxurious, too. Contoured seats add such a nice touch. They're wide and deep and couldn't be more comfortable. You don't feel as though you're sitting on the floor when you sit in a Thunderbird! And I like having the service console separating the seats. Very smart. And practical.

"I like the wide doors. No matter what I'm wearing, I can get in and out with no effort at all. A blessing!

"But do you know what I like best of all? The way I look in my Thunderbird! It makes me look glamorous. I feel glamorous in it. It's that kind of car. And let's face it—a car is an accessory these days. And accessories must be smart."

See how you look in a Thunderbird

Next time you look at cars with your husband, let him see how you look in a Thunderbird. Let him see how he feels in a Thunderbird. Let him drive it around the corner—just once will do it—and he'll buy it for you. You'll have a Thunderbird all your own!

Your Ford dealer invites you to compare luxury cars for beauty, comfort and glamour. Do this and you'll agree with Anne Cole that the new Thunderbird is "the smartest car on the road." Yet the 1959 Thunderbird costs far less than other luxury cars!

House Beautiful
JULY ■ 1959

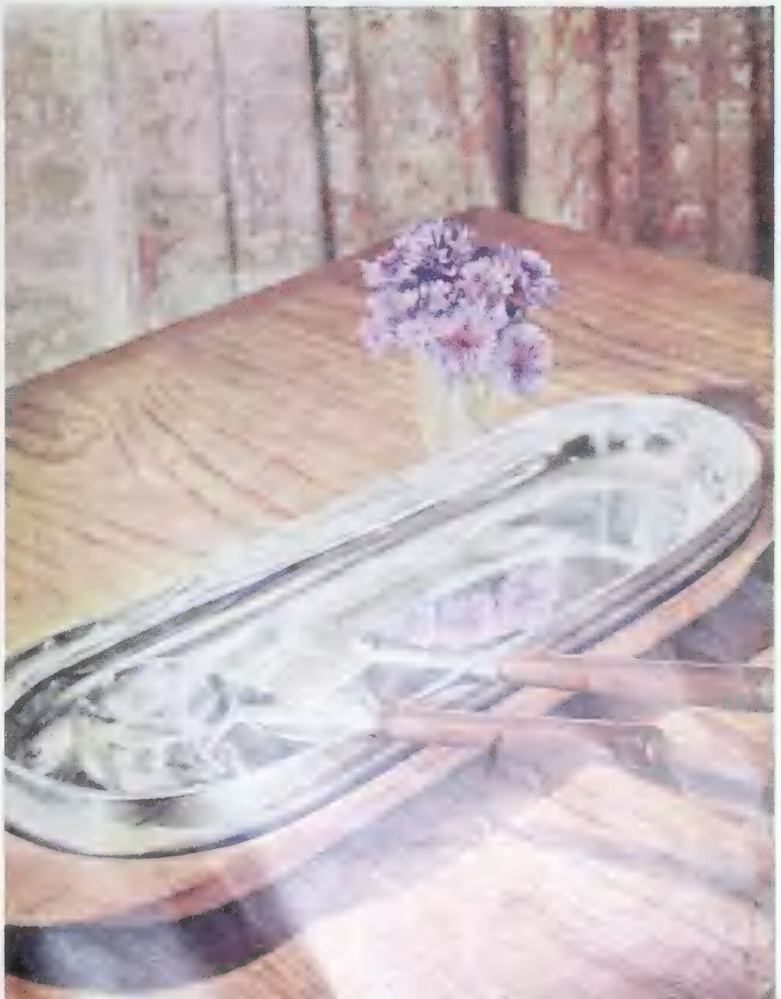
PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

In Scandinavia artistry has its place, even on the kitchen counter. The heart of the house can be equipped with one-of-a-kind ceramic pots. The pot holder is a little thing of beauty. Though woven in a factory, the dish towel is linen damask designed by a famous hand weaver. For the designers' names and sources of these objects, please see page 123.

What is the Scandinavian look?

Prettier things for everyday use

• It is inevitable that House Beautiful would be more than moderately interested in design from Scandinavia. We follow the development of design all over the world, and the contribution made by the four Scandinavian countries stands out like a bright bouquet in a gray room. Taken as a whole, it can be called one of the main sources of freshness and integrity in the world today. The hand of the artist is present in everything, from the humblest pot holder to serious possessions of timeless value. Since we believe that every moment and every movement should be endowed with significance and beauty, House Beautiful devotes a whole issue to ideas and things Scandinavian.



Wide gamut of design expression is shown here, from the effortless charm of the dishes to the great refinement of the vase.

Hors d'oeuvres tray and salad bowl show the simple approach to solving today's needs elegantly. Design by Jens Quistgaard for Dansk.

Sterling-silver dish is suave understatement that dramatizes silver's unique qualities. Design by Kay Bojesen of Denmark.

Both ends of this ceramic pot can hold flowers, depending on the length of the stems. Designed by Kyllikki Salmenhaara of Finland.

Why will such things be heirlooms tomorrow?

Co-ordinated design of the wood tray and the glass dishes gives maximum use. Little feet on dishes slip into holes of tray, letting you make pretty arrangements. Each can work separately. By Jens Quistgaard for Dansk

● One overriding characteristic of useful Scandinavian objects is that so many of them qualify as timeless art. Why should this be so?

The distinction between fine art and practiced art, a distinction that seems to exist in America, does not exist in Scandinavian countries. Their designing starts with the problem and attempts to solve it in the most direct way. If the solution is inspired enough, it will produce beauty naturally. This has been a characteristic of all great art of the past. The opposite way—setting out to create a beautiful object, hoping it will also be useful—has never been successful. Beauty can never be created in a vacuum. It must always be sparked and disciplined by the reality of necessity. Beauty cannot be born without a problem to be solved, whether it be speaking to the heart (as in religious objects) or answering a utilitarian need (as in a salad bowl).

About 90 per cent of the objects shown in this issue are available at stores in the United States. The other 10 per cent can be obtained if traveling in Scandinavia.

No matter which end of this vase is in use, the other end acts as a mounting. Texture and color are soil-like and give plants a natural setting. Even when empty, it has an interesting form.

The noble curvature of this teak salad bowl makes it an object of beauty with more than an ordinary practical function. Its gentle form is just right for the natural movement one uses when tossing salad greens. It was designed by Kay Bojesen, of Denmark, one of the great wood and silver craftsmen of our time.

For designers' names and sources of objects, turn to page 123

This is the perfect marrying of material to purpose: a logical glass form creating a logical vase form. Shape of inner vase helps the arranging of flower stems. Designed by Saara Hopea, blown by Jaakko Niemi for Waertsila-Notsjoe, Finland.

Everyday objects take on both a visual and tactile interest through a combination of glazed and unglazed surfaces. The lining and rims of these bowls and pitchers are glazed to make cleaning easy. Gracefully curved handles are wrapped with cane, feel soft in the hand. Designed by Sonja Andersen of Sweden. At Bonniers, New York City.

Varying heights of these crystal candelabra let you make interesting compositions. Prism stems play up the glitter of the flames. Bobêches are separate so wax removal is facilitated. Candelabra from Kosta, Sweden, through Ebeling and Reuss.

● As any regular reader of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL must be quite aware, we are dedicated to the proposition that beauty and utility should not be separated, that they can be made features of the same object.

This is not, in any way, a new idea. But it has suffered mightily from semantic troubles during the last few decades. The word "Functional" became the world-wide slogan of a new design movement which promised that beauty would result naturally if Functionalism were made paramount. (This movement was variously called "Modern" or "International Style" or "Bauhaus.")

But the basic flaw was that the slogan, "Functional," was really nothing but a hollow, empty term. Slowly it began to be clear that the designs of the Functionalists were no more functional—perhaps less so—than those of the traditionalists and classicists who preceded.

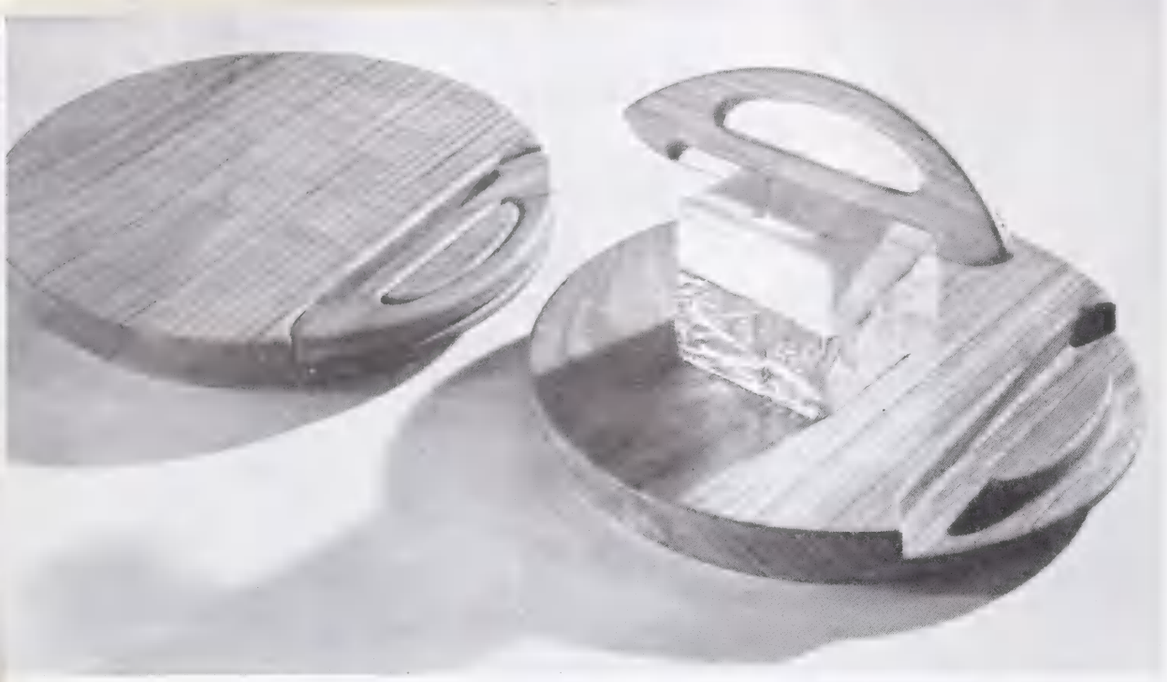
This semantic confusion, which promised that beauty could be born of common sense, produced real aesthetic confusion for both designers and the public. Products and buildings were labeled "functional" when they clearly were not. "Honest design" was claimed, but not delivered, in products that grossly misused the materials of which they were made. But above all, beauty that was clearly discernible to everyone seldom resulted. Only the initiated few were able to grasp this "new" beauty. Yet beauty has been considered, through the ages, as universal—able to speak to all.

This contradiction between the words and the realities in design matters has been world-wide. Only in one part of the world—Scandinavia—did true rationality not give in (to any marked degree) to the gibberish of Modernism.



As a result, the contemporary designs of Scandinavia are especially significant at this time when the Modern movement has lost its way and when people have discovered that "Functionalism" is not enough.

This is why HOUSE BEAUTIFUL finds the designing of Scandinavia worthy of having a whole issue devoted to it. By examining what they are doing and how they "got that way," it can give us a renewal of our own personal standards of how to judge things. We hope this issue will blow away some of the confusion which has befogged the air and our minds for the last few decades.

Why has Scandinavia escaped, on the whole, the curse of the above-mentioned confusion? It is hard to be certain about why. But after much interviewing of observers, (Please turn the page) much reading, and four years of personal con tact with persons in all four countries who ar vitally concerned in this, here is my conclusion

Artists and designers have been kept soun and healthy in Scandinavia because the peopl (in cross section) are interested, follow it, g to exhibitions, buy knowingly and critically. I short, they participate. Consequently, the de signers have an aware audience, a broad, cross sectional audience—not just a small, would-b professional audience.

Briefly, it has been a peoples' art. This ha had a most healthy effect, and has had innumer able good by-products. It has made the learnin of a craft an honorable thing. It has kept school for handcrafts alive and flourishing. It ha created (maybe kept alive) a set of values whic require that architects serve a two-year appren ticeship in some building trade before they ar eligible for a license. It has caused exhibition to be a vital part of life, instead of the propert of the would-be culture addicts, poseurs, an hangers-on, as is so often the case in Americ (In America, snobbism is rampant in this are and the professional aesthetes, who are n usually designers, operate on the theory tha if many people like it, it can't be good; to l good it must be for the few.)

This is not at all the social climate that th American designer works in. Here, too ofte the designer scorns the mastery of his materi and the craft that he is designing for. He is drawing-board designer, stays away from th factory, away from soiling his hands with th

The same kind of logical thinking is brought to bear in the design of spoons, whether they are of silver or of wood. ols and materials he is designing for. He is a eorist, not a craftsman. He designs for the pro- ssionals like himself—not for the buying pub- . He is a captive, you might say, of his own ivate little clique.

As a result, Scandinavian design seems to us ry democratic. And much of the publicized merican design seems just the opposite—very oteric, for a few cultural "aristocrats" (self- ppointed) who want the right to tell the rest us what is good and what is bad.

This social climate has made it hard for merican designers who are truly free. They are t recognized for perfecting old forms. They e recognized only for experimental "out-of-the- ld-blue-yonder" innovations, which may or ay not be better.

Also the United States business practice of ving four wholesale markets a year, pressures signers to produce too much, too fast. Every- ing must be brand new, never seen before. here is never time to perfect. This pace is t an aid to greatness in design. Manufacturers d store buyers never say: "It's new but is it tter?" So American business has aided and etted, perhaps unwittingly, an unfortunate uation.

So what is the core of Scandinavian design? Designers know how to work out of the nature their material, because they are craftsmen emselves.

They have the bene- (Please turn to page 122)

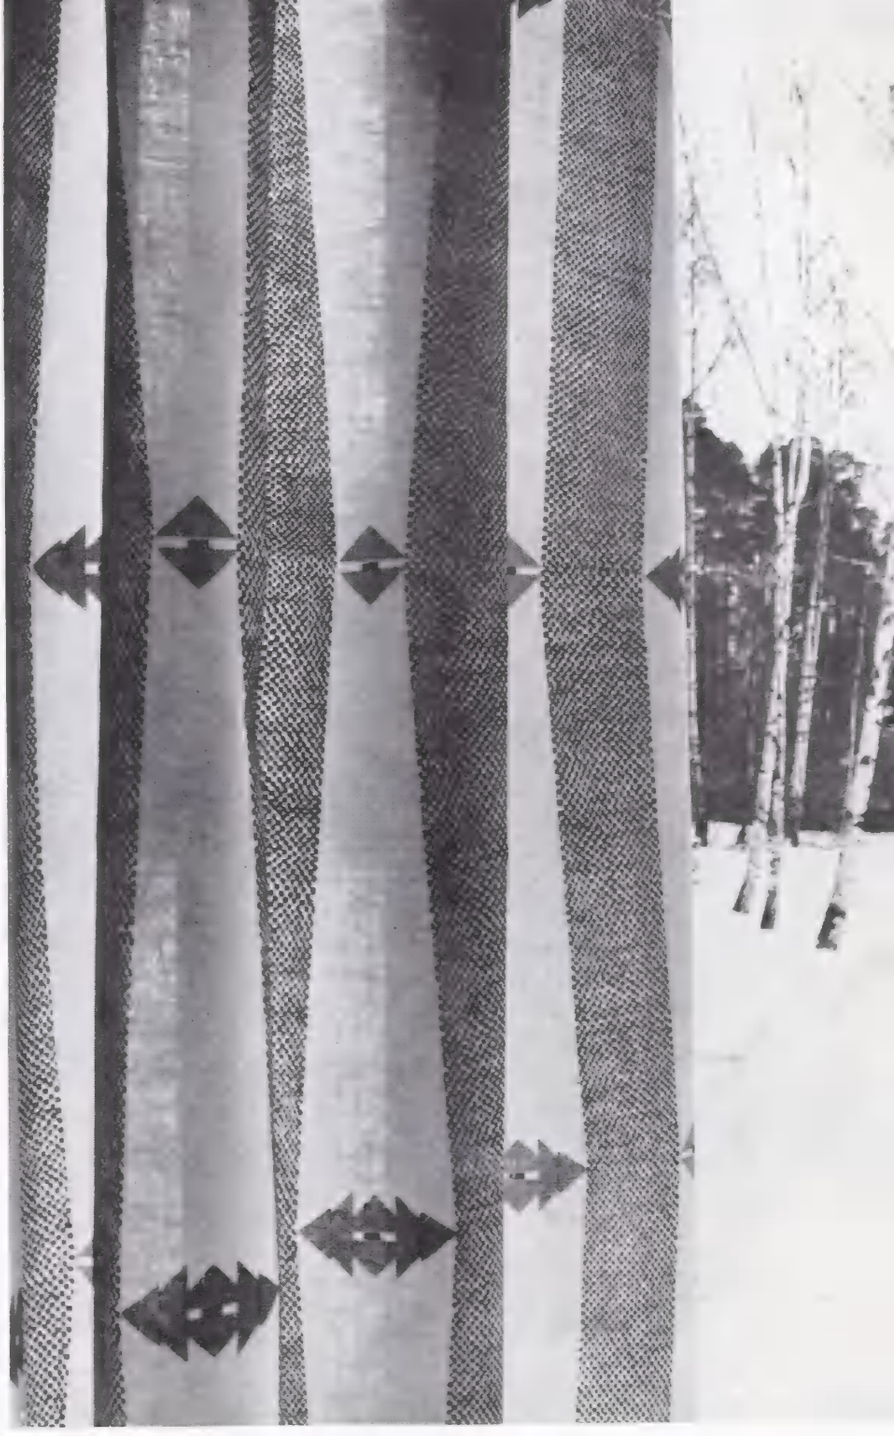
Nature:

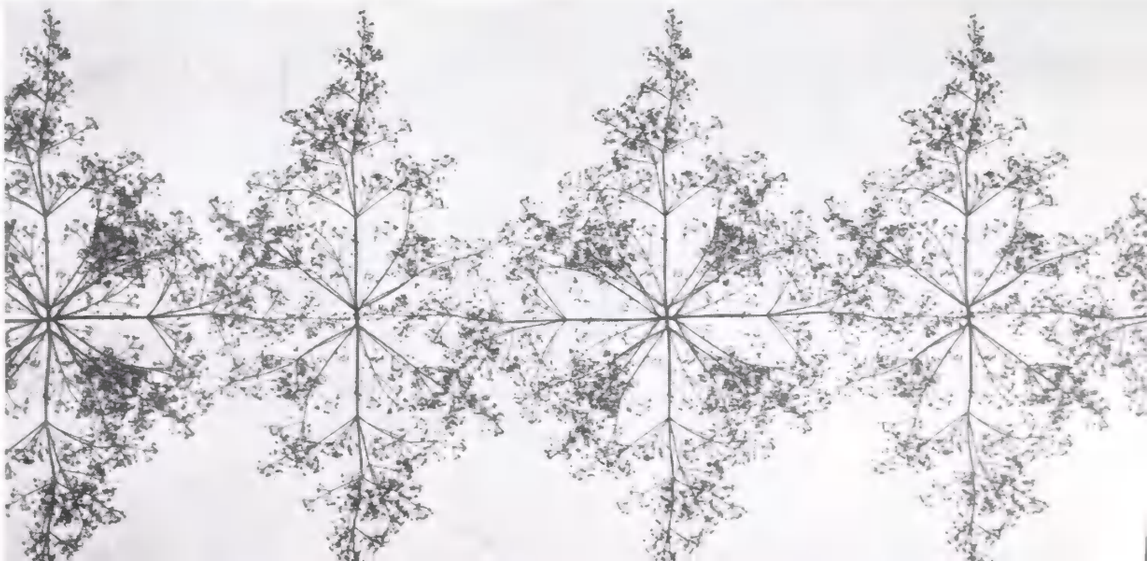


The most compelling influence on their design

● HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has watched Scandinavian arts and crafts closely since the end of the war, along with those of other countries. To us it is very evident that there is in Scandinavia a virility, an on-going, a quality of renewal that we do not see in abundance elsewhere. Their designers have not been caught up in the fads that have swept the design world during the last few decades. Their bond is to Nature, which gives perpetual artistic renewal. The art fads are only branches, stemming from a bigger point of view, getting thinner and thinner the farther they get from their source. In short, the branches are not self-renewing, but expendable.

When artists and designers have their design roots in the inspiration of Nature, they avoid going sterile and can grow and renew their inspiration endlessly. It is the difference between originality and imitativeness—between renewal and death.

Scandinavians are able to find beauty wherever they look. This tapestry was inspired by lichens growing on rocks, but it also reminds one of seaweed or flowers. They use the little things of Nature in extremely subtle ways, even as sources of contemplation. This hanging was designed by Eva Antilla of Finland.



This curtain fabric shows how the character and essence of a birch forest can be translated into textile form. It has, via threads, the same balance of whites and blacks, the same distribution of texture, the same verticality as birch trees. Yet it is not in any way a copy of birch trees. The first law of good design:

Exploit the nature of the material to its fullest

In judging the design worthiness of any object, the first consideration must be: How well has the material been used, technically and aesthetically, for the purpose to which it is being put?

A bad design violates the nature of its material. And one material should not be made to look like another, even if it is technically possible, because the unique beauty of each will be lost.

Scandinavian artists and designers are unusually sensitive to this basic law of beauty. Their understanding of what a material can legitimately be made to do comes from the fact that most of them are themselves skilled in the craft they design for, having served a suitably long apprenticeship. As a result, most Scandinavian design is worth studying, because it gives us good criteria by which to judge all objects.

Study the objects on this page, for instance. They are prime examples of how beautiful design can result from a poetic exploitation of raw material. This kind of full exploitation produces a oneness—a joining of proportion, form, texture, coloring, and appropriateness for its purpose into an inseparable whole. One example exploits the blown, molten, bubbly quality of glass. The bracelet freshly exploits the characteristics of silver. The eggshell-thin bowls bring out new fragility in age-old porcelain, while the vase utilizes fully the sturdy quality of stoneware and the possibilities inherent in glazing and surface ornamentation. The linen damask towel finds new patterning possible in machine weaving.

Part of the exploitation of a material lies in harnessing its natural imperfections and turning them to account. Obviously it takes skill to control and manipulate this natural tendency. The scattering of bubbles in the (Please turn the page) glass vases are a case in point. The random distribution of the ceramic glazes are another point.

Another part of the act of exploitation lies in knowing how far to go or not to go. Any given material can be used with delicacy and great refinement or, with equal validity, it can be made heavy and strong and thick. This is why different artist-designers get different effects out of the same basic material. But still these effects must always lie within the nature of the material and never violate its characteristics. This is fundamental.

William Blake's famous line, "Exuberance is Beauty," has meaning in this connection. For the artist and designer who has deep insight into his material can make it blossom to its fullest, like a healthy flower. If he does not understand it, and has to labor with it, only distortion and ugliness can result. For designers' names and sources of these objects, please turn to page 123.

"The Chair," probably the most stolen-from design in the world, carried Wegner's fame beyond Denmark. No matter where you stand, its lyrical, fluid lines seem to take on the dimensions of sculpture. It is made in teak or oak, with a cane or leather seat.

Hans J. Wegner poet of practicality

A Danish designer with a genius for wedding lyricism to common sense is the world's greatest influence on furniture today

By MARION GOUGH

● In 1949 Hans J. Wegner, a soft-eyed, soft-spoken young man from Odense threw a significant pebble into the pool of furniture design. He created a chair—"The Chair," as it has since come to be known the world over. There was nothing startling or bizarre or experimental about it. It was unwrapped with no fanfare. But it had grace and freshness and, above all, a certain quality of truth which was sensed, as if intuitively, by people who never looked twice at furniture before.

Early in 1950, when The Chair was still unknown outside of Denmark, we observed with our own eyes how tourists in Den Permanente in Copenhagen singled it out in this shop where all things are beautiful, how they stood and delighted in the sight of it. They expressed wonder that wood uncoated by lacquer could be so smooth and satiny to the touch, how it could be molded so knowingly to conform to the human body. We heard people say that this was the kind of "modern" they liked, and there was lots of wistful American talk about the excellence of European craftsmanship. Later that year, The Chair was brought to the American market by Albert Hagemayer of Watson and Boaler in Chicago and by Georg Jensen. Although there were other Scandinavian designers, and good ones, working out of the same philosophy as Wegner, it seems to have been The Chair which first opened the world's eyes to the beauty of sculptured wood, rounded forms, and the (Please turn the page) matte finish of oiled teak and waxed oak, Danish influences you now see everywhere. And if imitation is the highest form of compliment, Wegner has received it, for no designer's work is more brazenly copied.

In retrospect it is a significant part of the Wegner story that people were "discovering" this beauty even before the experts stamped it with their approval. For humanity is the very essence of Hans Wegner's designing. His furniture not only reveals his acute understanding of what human beings need to be physically comfortable; it also indicates a rare insight into that intangible but very real human need for beauty. There is a universally appealing emotional quality in his furniture. It would seem that its design has been "felt through" as intensively as it has been thought through.

And thought-through it is. For every Wegner piece has a disarming simplicity, a directness that makes you say, "Why didn't I think of that?" But you must look at it twice, as you would a couturier dress. It is so unassuming that only a knowing eye recognizes the minute, unobtrusive details that add up to this calculated simplicity. It's a matter of almost imperceptible pattern created by contrasting wood grain, of join-

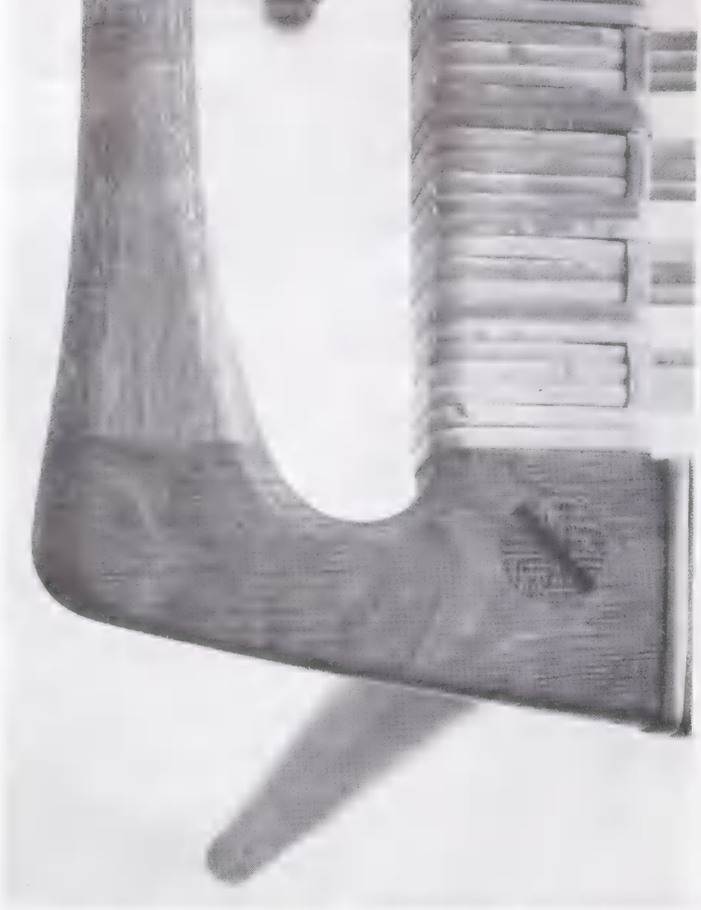
Knowing wood as a cabinetmaker, Wegner realizes when it may be thin, as in a chair arm; when it must be thick to take stress, as in a leg.

Above, pure in line as a Brancusi sculpture, the back and arms of a swivel chair seem almost to be carved out of a single block of wood. Wood grains are so perfectly matched and joined that not a visible seam mars the illusion. In the same chair (right) Wegner, the master woodworker, has given a fresh, warm look to metal tubing, concentrating on the rounded corners it can create.



Factory-made chair below shows why you need to scrutinize Wegner's designs. At first glance you might miss seeing that back leg and seat frame are one piece of wood. Covering is woven cord.

ings you can barely see, of chair seats and back legs that flow out of one continuous piece of wood. There is nothing that isn't needed. Every lovely curve, every sculptured part has a practical purpose. As with most of the great simple things in the world, these effortless-seeming solutions have been preceded by the most complicated thought processes, trial, error, and fresh starts, backed by knowledge and that famous infinite capacity for taking pains. Genius is another word for it.

There is another kind of humanity implicit in Wegner's work, because it is designed out of Wegner's intimate knowledge of how wood can be manipulated by skilled human hands. And no small part of his contribution to modern furniture design is that his work has drawn attention once more to the dignity and value of craftsmanship. Like most Scandinavian designers, he is a craftsman himself, for in these sensible countries a designer is expected to (Please turn the page)

Rarely does a Wegner piece have a squared-off corner or an acute angle. An angle becomes a liquid curve. See both beauty and economy of design in the handles of this meticulously caned bench. They are simply a continuation of the seat frame, but look like an unobtrusive ornament. The leg dowel is exposed like a nailhead.

Some Wegner designs, originally made only by hand, are now produced by factory methods. This chair is one. Danish factory workers are so skilled in wood that none of the design's subtle nuances of thick and thin are lost. See how back posts and legs swell out and slender down.

Since Wegner approaches wood like a sculptor, his freestanding forms, particularly tables and chairs, are uniquely beautiful "in the round." Captain's chair has incredibly ingenious back posts—legs, back, arm supports all in one. Also incredible, it's a production-made piece.

have mastered a craft before he can assume the title of Designer or Architect.

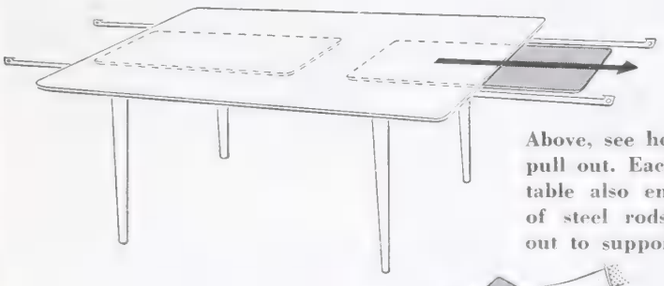
Architect Wegner started his career as a cabinetmaker, working wood with his hands, learning from experience what he could expect it to do. It is no wonder that his designs have validity, since they evolve out of his knowledge of his material. (Reflect on that. And also on the curious fact that there are some furniture designers in the U.S.A. who have never held a whittling knife in their hands and have barely seen the inside of the factories they design for.)

Wegner is known and respected as a craftsman by the cabinetmakers who do the cream of his work—the entirely hand-made pieces—in the small but eminent factory of Johannes Hansen. A total staff of 18 craftsmen work on each individual piece like jewelers or couturiers, molding the wood so that it seems almost fluid, creating the almost imperceptible joinings, fitting in the hardware with the precision of diamond-setters. The only standard seems to be perfection. Even the backs of chests or the bottoms of chairs, any parts not usually exposed to sight, are so painstakingly finished that they are as beautiful in their own way as the visible parts.

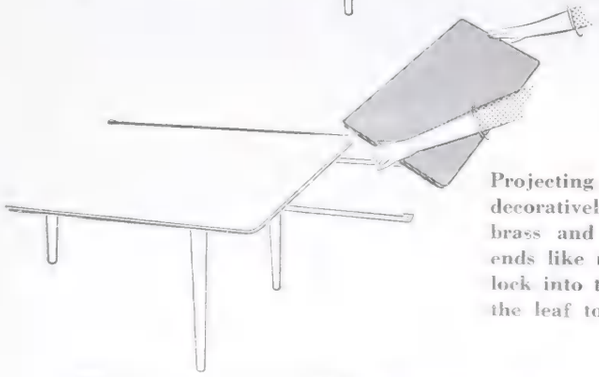
This, we believe, is the highest caliber of craftsmanship attainable in the world today. The loving care and pride in workmanship seems to come through almost tangibly, giving the furniture the quality of fine art or, as it has been called, usable sculpture.

The woods used are primarily Siamese teak and oak. The teak is usually designated for surfaces and facings, and then only the center cuts of the teak log are used, for this part of the tree gives the (Please turn the page)

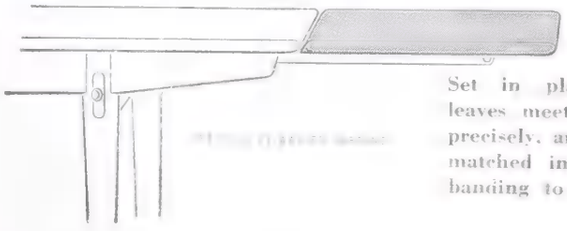
Danish valet, as utilitarian a piece of furniture as ever designed, has the sculptured quality of an art object. The chair can be a coat hanger, but its seat also hinges up to hold a pair of trousers. Underneath there's space for jewelry. Brass fitments are like jewelry themselves.



An extendable table, so suave and simple that only genius could have designed it



Look back for a moment at the teak dining table on page 64. You will be surprised to learn that stored within its slim top are two extra leaves which can extend its length from 76″ to 117″. But like any Wegner piece that performs in a mechanical way, the table does so with clean simplicity and a minimum of added mechanical parts. The furniture itself works, for function has been conceived as an organic part of the whole, like the muscles in the human body. Below, see its performance.



Cross-section shows how a built-in casing at each end of the table holds a leaf. Leaves are inserted lengthwise. Casings hold leaves in overlapping position.

Above, see how the leaves pull out. Each end of the table also encases a pair of steel rods which pull out to support the leaves.

Projecting steel bars are decoratively tipped with brass and formed at the ends like ring pulls. They lock into the underside of the leaf to hold it firmly.

Set in place, extension leaves meet table surface precisely, are meticulously matched in graining and banding to the table top.

most stable wood for solid wood construction. Because of its strength, oak is likely to be used in supporting members. Woods are rarely given any finish other than innumerable buffings and rubbings with oil or wax. Handmade pieces shown here are imported to the U.S.A. by Georg Jensen, New York, and Svend Wohlert, San Francisco.

Some of Wegner's designs which were previously only handmade are now being factory-made in quantity by mass-production methods, and naturally at lower cost. But since Danish factories are small and the standards of woodworking skills high, the quality of the work is excellent. Wegner production pieces are made in the factories of Andreas Tuck, Carl Hansen, C. M. Madsen, Getama, and A. P. Stolen. The production pieces shown here are imported by George Tanier. As a means of identifying a bona fide Wegner design, both the designer's name and the factory name are on each piece of furniture whether made by hand or factory.

Wegner is not a prolific designer. By American standards (Please turn to page 114)

A reversible table top set on a cross-bar frame of fumed oak, is teak on one side, black Micarta on the other. Scandinavian fabrics:

Fresh vitality from a deep-rooted craft tradition

By FRANCES HEARD

● Weaving and needlework have been honored crafts in Scandinavia since long before the Viking queens were buried with their looms and tapestries. Even through the last century the spinning wheel and shuttle were symbols of subsistence, necessities of life to people who had to sustain themselves in isolated areas.

But Scandinavia is unique. While other countries let these handcrafts wither with the coming of the machine, the Scandinavians have deliberately perpetuated their craft heritage, adapting it to the needs of modern living, using it as a creative guide to industry so that even a machine-made fabric has overtones of the handmade. They have not only kept their well-learned skills alive, they are using them with vigorous creativity. Fresh patterns are executed in time-honored techniques, as in their modern linen damasks and contemporary versions of their traditional wool rugs. They explore the materials around them as resourcefully as their ancestors, weaving wall coverings of oat straw, fabrics of copper wire and cellophane. They employ their embroidery skills not in endless repetition of outdated patterns, but in live designs inspired by their own times. The offspring of such craft awareness is valid contemporary beauty, desirable the world over. See it in the fabrics, rugs, and tapestries on the next six pages.

The pillow tops opposite are shining examples of contemporary Swedish embroidery design, made with their fine, native, handspun linen thread which seems to impart a satiny glow to the work. You can try your own hand with these lovely materials. Arrangements have been set up to make these designs available to you in kits of pre-stamped linen with the necessary yarns included. The embroidery has been started on the linen you will receive, as you see in the stamped, flat pieces beside the finished pillows. The stitches are essentially simple ones and, with an actual started example of each to compare your work with, it is an easy matter to finish the design. No need to worry if the back of your embroidery is a bit more helter-skelter than the example. The important part is the finished effect on top. Order the started kits containing linen and linen thread for each pillow top by name and number. Send designated amount to Kasha Lindquist, P. O. Box 12, Ridgefield, Connecticut. The kit will be sent you parcel post prepaid, direct from Sweden. Duty of about $2 will be collected by your postal carrier on delivery of the package to your door.

At the time this issue of House Beautiful is published, you may see for yourself the beauty of fine Scandinavian home furnishings on important display in several leading stores in the U. S. A.

Georg Jensen, 677 Fifth Ave., New York, a store which is practically a permanent exhibition of excellent Scandinavian design and craftsmanship, will have special exhibits of the merchandise they carry which is shown on our pages, for a month starting June 22.

Bonniers, 605 Madison Ave., New York, a shop which might be called a boutique of select Scandinavian wares, will similarly put on a special three-week exhibit starting June 15.

Lord and Taylor, 424 Fifth Ave., New York, will exhibit for the first time a new collection of home furnishings recently imported from Scandinavia, on the ninth floor, from June 22 through July.

latured forms are the best— but can still be perfected

By GUY HENLE

● In a world of ever-increasing pressure for new design forms, Scandinavia stands alone as an island of maturity, asking only for the best from its designers, not the newest. An informed public appreciates what perfection the shaving of half an inch may bring to an already well-established form. And even when the designers are developing new forms, they can work patiently out of their previous experience, so the result has a link with the past. By its intense interest in the frequent exhibitions and by their selective buying habits, a critical public keeps the designers on their toes. In response, the manufacturers move slowly, but surely, in new directions. Many firms let their designers create at the art level years before they expect commercial success. They recognize that new designs must accrue some public acceptance. None of the forms shown here is staggeringly new, but all show the beauty that evolves with experience and refinement.

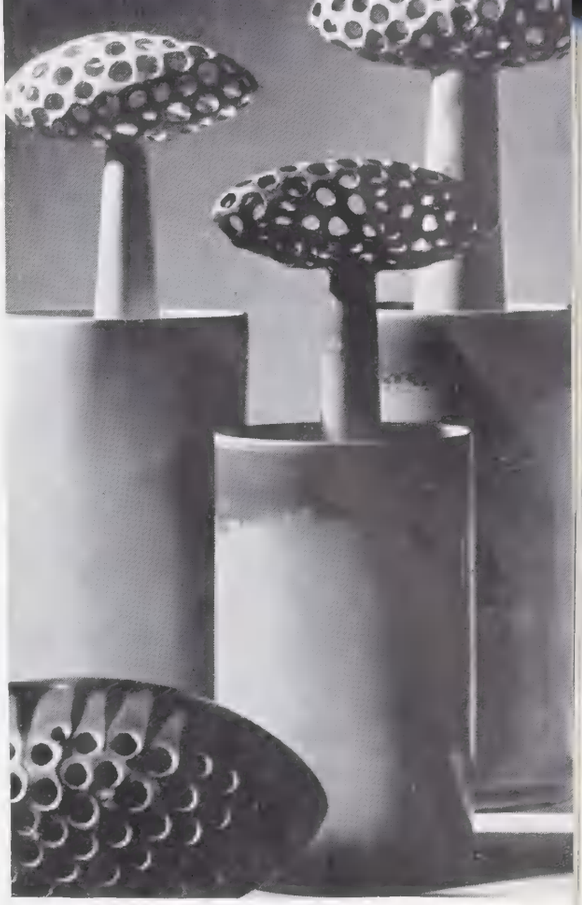
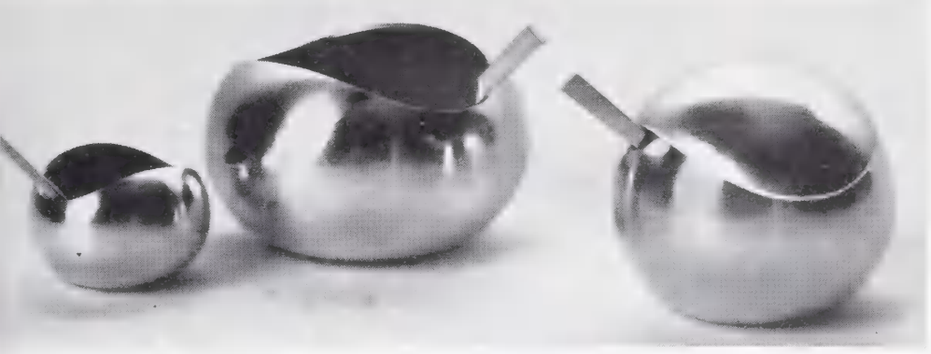
New Forms that are not Bizarre

PHOTOGRAPH BY STEPHEN MICHAEL



● Maturity in design does not lie simply in perfecting old forms. It must mean also the development of new forms, forms that break with the past but do it in so logical a way that they are immediately acceptable. You'll find nothing wildly experimental on this page, yet each of the objects offers a really new thought.

Mastery of material is the key to the Scandinavian designer's success. Because of his craftsman's background, he does not attempt to make his material—whether it be glass, ceramics, wood, or metal—into something it is not, simply for the sake of novelty. True creativity lies in the ability to present a new form with so sound and rational a basis that the instinctive reaction is to wonder why it wasn't made that way before. And only a design that reveals some hitherto-unknown facet inherent in the material itself can give us this new-but-just-right feeling. Scandinavia's craftsmen-designers have found the way.



Kaj Franck, Finland's imaginative designer in glass, presents new ideas in decanters. Two have tiny decanters in the stoppers for a second flavor. A glass-sculptured hen tops third. Blown by Jaakko Niemi, for Waertsila-Notsjoe.

The glass in these traditional shapes has been so worked that graceful fluid lines develop within the material, creating the feeling of the flowing liquid for which they were designed. This could only have been done with craftsman's knowledge of glass. By Ingeborg Lundin for Orrefors.

Ingeniously designed, with a Scandinavian flair for resourceful interchangeability, three hexagon-shape tables can unite in an arc to service a circular sectional sofa or can be used separately. The tables in this Danish collection by Selig are cabinet-made in Denmark, shipped knock-down to the U. S. A.

A new world-wide influence

● Home furnishings designs created to please 18 million Danes, Finns, Swedes, and Norwegians (a population less than New York and New Jersey) have walked off with top honors at the last three Triennales in Milan, competing with the world's best. Fourteen per cent of Scandinavian-made furniture is exported, enthusiastically accepted in such unlike places as England, Germany, Spain, South America, West Indies and, especially, the U. S. A.

Why? We submit that consumers the world over, disillusioned by the design falsities constantly confronting them, have greeted, like a breath of fresh air, the essential probity which earmarks Scandinavian design.

The very core of this is that the designer is himself a craftsman, designing not merely on paper, but truly out of the nature of his materials, which he knows intimately.

Trained in a tradition of resourcefulness, he concentrates on filling a human need directly and beautifully.

His own paying public at home, moreover, is a critical, knowing one. The Scandinavian consumer has an historical respect for rationality and an informed appreciation of craftsmanship, besides an intense interest in the frequent exhibitions which keep the designer's work open to the appraisal of public and press. No one falls for anything simply because a "big name" designed it. A designer is a big name only so long as his work reflects his ability. The incomprehensible is not acclaimed on the say-so of a clique of self-appointed pundits.

Under these happy circumstances, sensible beauty flowers. On these four pages see some Danish examples of it, imported by Selig Mfg. Co., and in stores across the U. S. A.

It is generally conceded, even among Scandinavians themselves, that the Danes excel in the sculptural manipulation of wood so that the arm of a chair like this one, designed by Ib Kofod-Larsen, meets your hand and arm in perfect conformation with human touch. Moreover, it is graceful to look at. The wood's satiny, soft-to-the-touch finish, often described by the Danes as "zichklinge," makes this woven cane and natural teak chair as aesthetically pleasant a tactile experience as a visual one. Norwegian-crafted accessories, Norwegian Silver Corp.

When Danish design takes on an unconventional turn, as in this two-tier carry-all of bentwood trays, you may be sure that it is not trick design for its own sake but a form that fulfills a need. This portable table slips easily over a chair or sofa arm or a bed to provide a handy surface.

A Scandinavian meal is no mere necessity of life but an important event, and so its accoutrements are painstakingly designed to have comfortable proportions. Walnut-veneer refectory table, cane-back chair and cane-shelf serving cart are engineered to conform with the movements and dining postures of their users. Chair seat is Naugahyde. Norwegian pewter bowl, Eisenberg-Lozano.

Danish designers were early to revive the use of caning for its visual and actual lightness. As the shelf of a coffee table, it underlines the lightness of the tapering, almost knife-thin bevel of wood top, keeps 5-foot table from presenting a bulky appearance.

This triangular table indicates a thorough thinking-through of function. Placed between seating groups it would tend to join them conversationally. Sculptural gallery with flared corners is pretty to look at and an easy-to-dust surface. Danish rug, designed by Nanna and Jorgen Ditzel, from George Tanier, Norwegian silver coffee pot made by Tostrup. Silver spoons, Marthinsen. Porcelain cups, Porsgrunds.

It is something of a design triumph to create a chair that can recline in five different positions and still retain its slender grace. Smooth rounding of the angle where front leg joins the arm is typical of Danish design's respect for human comfort and an example of skilled woodworking. The fresh look of perfected design

● Scandinavians conduct their affairs with a pleasant lack of urgency, which is the envy of American observers. Their ways have a serenity that is reflected in the placidity of their design. Industry, for instance, is content to retain creative designers on their staffs whose function it is to perfect old forms and experiment with new forms in the unhurried atmosphere of a studio. Much of their work may never see the light of day commercially. Certainly there is no pressure on them to create completely new collections once or twice a year. The emphasis is on quality, not quantity. Design evolves. If it is good, it is kept year after year, the only change being in the perfecting of details. And since it is good to start with, it retains a timeless, undated, always-usable freshness.

The undated, highly practical furniture on these two pages is made in Sweden, imported and factory-assembled in the U. S. A. by Dux.

● Scandinavian design influences are now so intermingled with American that it takes a bit of perceptive experience to distinguish the pure from the mixed. Some furniture, for instance, is imported in toto; some is partially made abroad and assembled in American factories; some is made here from designs created in Scandinavia. And there are copies which plagiarize the superficial form of Scandinavian design without reference to its organic nature or the craftsmanship it demands.

But there is also fine furniture of Danish inspiration designed and made in the U. S. A. by Americans who thoroughly understand Scandinavian design philosophy and woodworking skills. Above is the work of Jens Risom, Danish-born and trained designer and cabinetmaker, who has imparted his knowledge to his own American factory workers. Opposite is furniture designed by Larry Peabody, a young American who has studied and worked in Denmark, absorbing the essential viewpoint. Made by Richardson-Nemschoff.

Double-purpose design which doesn't look contrived, this teak table makes a graceful desk and extends to become a conference table with the raising of the single drop leaf. Masters of their art and craft

● The Scandinavian respect for arts and crafts is hard for a machine-conscious American to understand immediately, for we unfortunately tend to apply the words to handwork which lacks dignity and importance. But the Scandinavian lives out of a handmade tradition. Even his most important belongings fall into the arts and crafts category. His furniture, for instance—its design is considered an art. Much of it, especially "furniture for export," is made by cabinetmakers, not factories. And you cannot doubt that a craft has great honor in Scandinavia when you see the beauty skilled hands give the most mundane objects.

The furniture on these two pages is the work of Danish designers who might be called masters of both arts and crafts. Only those who understand thoroughly both the engineering requirements of comfortable furniture and the capabilities of wood itself could create such sculptured, rational beauty as you see here.

An L-shaped desk that lets you enjoy work surfaces on two sides is comfortable and beautiful. Peter Hvidt and O. Molgaard Nielsen, who designed it, made it as much sculpture as furniture. Scandinavia's genius

The zany horsemen bearing candles are hand-painted ceramic candlesticks, the work of Bjorn Wiinblad of Denmark, a master of fantasy. These and the platter, mug, and bowl (left) are pieces beloved by collectors. World-wide admirers search for his drolleries of design which make a slight gesture to utility. He also does posters and illustrates such classic books as Arabian Nights. From Georg Jensen.

Rabbits, gymnastic monkeys and bears, hand-carved of teak, maple, or oak by Denmark's late, great Kay Bojesen are three of 12 kinds of animals with sleek, strokable curves and perfectly articulated joints that delight both grown-ups and children. Kay Bojesen's hand-carved wooden cars, trains, and boats also have admirers of all ages. His creativity as both woodworker and silversmith typifies the versatility of most Scandinavian designers. Georg Jensen.

for artistic playfulness

By EPSIE KINARD

● The light-hearted designs on these pages express a spirit of play as pure and uninhibited as the inventions of a child. But unlike children, the creators of this fun and fantasy are top-flight Scandinavian artists. They can easily turn from a serious to an impish mood. Those captivating animals above are by Denmark's late Kay Bojesen who was also one of the great Danish silver designers. See his serving dish on page 52 and his salad bowls on pages 53 and 79.

Scandinavian designs in a gay, antic mood are not intended to be taken too seriously, nor serve too resolute a purpose. Fun often teases the functional, as witness the puckish designs, painted by Denmark's Bjorn Wiinblad, on ceramic platter, mug, bowl and candlesticks, shown opposite. Humor is tossed over a shoulder. Playfulness is aimed at bringing grown-ups back to that wonderful nostalgic world of childhood. Even toys stray from the nursery, are so cherished as home decorations they are kept out of the reach of children.

A Scandinavian designer sees beauty and the pure makings of fun in almost everything he sees: in boar bristles, sheep shearings, blanks swept out of a glass factory. When he turns these into fun or fantasy, he does it with the same effective use of material that he employs for sober designs.

Beautiful little solutions—

Mothered by necessity

● Observing Scandinavian answers to the most minor needs of living, one has the feeling that the designer as a family man understands the problem from his personal experience, namely coping with the demands of limited space. For living quarters are small in these countries. No matter how small their incidental furniture, it has real usability. It's never novel for novelty's sake, never skimpy in scale or flimsily made. It's often so perfectly crafted, it's a little jewel of cabinetwork.

How to Season your Cooking with Scandinavia

Cookbooks by the dozen can give you each country's traditional recipes, but House Beautiful's Party Editor tells you how to adapt a Scandinavian attitude to your own personal cuisine

By VIRGINIA STANTON

● Scandinavia is so food-conscious, the food is so dreamy and so full of ideas to take back to brighten up your cookery at home that I'm naturally up on Cloud Nine every time we go.

The first time I went, though, I was in for a big surprise. I was prepared to go overboard on the smorgasbord, thinking that everyone over there lived on a steady diet of smoked eel, herring salad, hot meat balls, and the other gorgeous items of delicatessen you find weighing down smorgasbord tables in American restaurants.

I discovered instead that Scandinavian cooking is really about as cosmopolitan a cuisine as you can sample anywhere in the world. Sure, it has its own unique flavors and traditions—herring, sour cream, boiled potatoes, and dill run through their menus like a theme song, and all four countries have national specialties. But for the most part the food you eat in Scandinavian homes is worldly, strongly influenced by France, Germany, and England, with some Americanisms creeping into it via the home freezer and the ready-mix. One of the most popular newspaper columns in Stockholm has to do with foreign foods, and the gals over there can get as excited as you can over a new recipe for a curry or a paella. But since they've been trained from childhood in the principles of cooking and are seasoned judges of food, both in the raw and in the pot, they seem to be able to merge the outside influences with the traditional ones to produce a kind of cookery that has a distinctive personality of its own.

The smorgasbord is a Swedish tradition, a lavishly presented buffet of separate dishes that run through the cookbook from cold smoked fish to hot meats and desserts—five courses, garnished to the nines and all set out at once. The Finns, Norwegians, and Danes have their equivalents because all these countries share similar tastes. Sad to say, the traditional, full-fledged smorgasbord is getting rarer and rarer, for it runs into money, besides taking days of preparation. But for a big cocktail party or a buffet supper, you can't beat the concept of a smorgasbord. Even if the smorgasbord menu I'm about to suggest isn't authentic down to the last chopped anchovy, you can still beguile your guests with its foreign accent, adapting the unique Nordic flavors and food combinations and spiking up the menu with some of the honest-to goodness Scandinavian foods that come in tins and jars.

I'd make my smorgasbord wingding a buffet supper, since I take a dim view of cocktail parties, although this stick-to-the-ribs food is what a cocktail (Please turn the page) party needs. And with this type of food it's as easy to have fifty as twenty guests, so your party can be anything you want to call it. But before you tot up your guest list, there are a few things you should know about typical Scandinavian foods and flavors.

On these three pages you'll get an inkling of Scandinavia's cosmopolitan food and entertaining in tables set by Mrs. Estrid Ericson, one of Stockholm's most sophisticated hostesses and director of the famous Svenskt Tenn home furnishings shop. Opposite, cloth and Plexiglas candlesticks by Josef Frank, and stainless flatware by Sigvard Bernadotte are Swedish. Lacquer bowl is Japanese, carafe is English. The decanter used for "snaps" is Venetian glass.

The Danes make a big feature of their smorrebrod, or open-face sandwiches. They put Dagwood to shame in what they heap upon a slice of bread. But it's so artistically done, you almost hate to gobble up those sandwich pictures. Their pork and dairy products are exceptionally good.

Norwegians have the kaltbord, similar to smorgasbord, and theirs are the world's most succulent sardines. They specialize in smoked fish, even smoke lamb and mutton, a delicious idea I wish our meat producers would latch on to for it would add such variety to our meat diet.

The Finns do wonderful things with meat and fish puddings. Smoked reindeer meat is one of their more exotic contributions. There's a Karelian (Please turn to page 111)

Wall storage units— in the Nordic tradition of practical beauty

• Scandinavians have been practical masters of space conservation since the Vikings outfitted their ships with collapsible beds. This genius is being widely exported to the whole world in their modular wall cabinet systems. These were all designed to solve storage needs in Scandinavian homes which like ours, have grown smaller while possessions have increased. The solutions are direct, undevious, "elegant" as a mathematical solution is said to be elegant—a few basic cabinets proportioned to group and stack in endless combinations as storage and space needs change. They look built-in but are easily dismounted and regrouped, so you can take the built-in look with you when you move. Yet this rationally engineered, inexpensive practicality evolves as a thing of beauty.

SKAAL—a graceful custom that gives you the clue to Scandinavian good manners

● Your dinner companion catches your eye, raises his glass, says "Skaal!" and, looking in your eyes, drinks. Then, still holding up his glass, he bows to you slightly before replacing it on the table. Meantime, you reciprocate the toast simultaneously.

This is the mannerly and traditional skaal ceremony (pronounced "skole") which all four Scandinavian countries preserve. There's an unexpected punctilio about this which invariably delights a stranger, particularly an American stranger who can hardly believe that there are people in this busy world who will take time out to salute each other formally. For no matter how gaily a skaal is offered, it is tinged with seriousness. It's a token of the dignity of human friendship. And it is not too much to say that it is typical of the civilized concern for humanity that underlies most of what is Scandinavian, the very thing that strikes so sympathetic a note with Americans.

Scandinavians seem to recognize that the disciplines of courtesy oil the wheels of human relations, so they live by rather elaborate codes of etiquette. But their general good-humored good sense saves them from stuffiness.

The skaal ceremony, for instance, is fraught with polite nuances. If you are invited to a meal, you do not eat or drink until the host rises, glass in hand, makes a speech of welcome to his table, and skaals the company. During the meal the gentlemen skaal the ladies and each other (Please turn to page 124) behind the design scenes. You can talk to designers, potters, cabinetmakers, silversmiths, glassblowers. (You really can, too, for almost everyone speaks English.) And, best of all, here's how you can acquire home furnishings of major importance you might not be able to duplicate at home, and certainly not at Scandinavian prices. (See page 121 for information on customs duties, shipping, etc.)

This unique fiesta, evidence of the Nordic public's attentiveness to the things they live with, is sponsored by the arts and crafts societies of each country. The purpose of these powerful groups is to further good design for everyday living both among independent craftsmen and in industry. And to give you some idea of the deep-rooted nature of their influence on popular taste, the first of these societies was founded in Sweden in 1845, the others eventually following suit.

For the record, their names are: National Association of Danish Arts and Crafts (Landsforeningen Dansk Kunsthaandvaerk), Palaegade 4, Copenhagen; Industrial Art Society of Finland (Suomen Taideteollisuusyhdistys), Temppelikatu 15A, Helsinki; National Society of Norwegian Arts and Crafts and Industrial Design (Landsforeningen Norsk Brukskunst), Wegelandsveien 17, Oslo; Swedish Society of Industrial Design (Svenska Slojdforeningen), Nybrogatan 7, Stockholm.

Each of these countries also maintains societies that foster handcrafts in the home and have shops not to be missed by anyone interested in fabrics, rugs, embroidery, and knitting. They are the Danish Handicrafts Guild (Selskabet til Haandarbejdts Fremme); Friends of Finnish Handicraft (Suomen Kasityon Ystavat); Norwegian Home Arts and Crafts Association (Den Norske Husflidsforcning); Swedish Handicraft Industries Association (Hemslojdsforbundet).

To savor such a trip to the fullest, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL suggests a 25-day Design Cavalcade itinerary through Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Denmark. Since our editors have been virtually commuting to Scandinavia for ten years and have been on hand for three Cavalcades, it is based on experiences we found particularly rewarding. We present it with days and dates synchronized with this year's Cavalcade, but you can transpose or improvise as you will. It's also elastic enough to serve as a guide for spring and summer travel. We are indebted to the Scandinavian Travel Commission for helping us whip it up into practical shape. You can let your travel agent take it from here or you can follow it free lance. In any case, we urge you to reserve transportation and hotels immediately.

We assume your presence in Bergen, Norway, on August 25, just as the Cavalcade starts in that country. (Norwegian Cavalcade exhibits continue through Sept. 30.) You might leave New York via the Norwegian America Line's M. S. "Oslofjord" on August 18, or by Scandinavian Airlines flights from New York to Bergen on August 24. Icelandic Airlines flights could also be worked into this time table. (The Swedish American Line's M. S. "Stockholm" Viking Lane Cruise, leaving New York on August 26, will take its passengers to the Edinburgh Festival and then on for a sampling of the Design Cavalcade in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden.)

For the return our schedule suggests the Norwegian America Line's M. S. "Bergensfjord" leaving Copenhagen on September 20, or the Swedish American Line's M. S. "Kungsholm" leaving Gothenburg on September 21, or SAS and Icelandic flights from Copenhagen on or about the 21st.

August 25, 26. The seaport of Bergen, one of Norway's oldest, prettiest, and busiest towns is a good first taste of Nordic tradition. You might make an evening tour to the ancient town of Fana, a morning and an afternoon car or bus trip to Edvard Grieg's home in Troldhaugen and the curiously oriental 12th-century Fantoft stave church. Be sure to visit Bergen's Art-Handicraft Museum of West Norway and the Husfliden shop of the Association of Home Arts and Crafts. See Theodore Olsen's silver shop. Brandt's is a good shop for Norway's excellent furs. Have lunch at the restaurant on Mt. Floyen to view the rugged grandeur of the landscape which surrounds the town and explains a lot about the Norwegian temperament. Good hotels in Bergen are Orion, Norge, Bristol, Rosenkrantz, Neptun.

August 27. Give yourself over to a three-day tour through speechless-making scenery, driving by bus or car to Norheimsund on the Hardangerfjord. Lunch here, then go along the fjord to the resort of Ulvik, for a night at Brakanes Hotel.

August 28. After a Norwegian breakfast (everything from herring through ham and eggs to cheese) drive on to Voss to see some fine old Norwegian architecture, then down to Gudvangen on the Sognefjord. From here cruise through the fjord to Flaam. Stay overnight at the Fretheim Hotel.

August 29. Via the famous Flaam Railway, climb 3000 feet up the mountain to Myrdal and the Bergen Railway train to Oslo—8 more hours of the most breathtaking scenery you've ever seen.

Aug. 30, 31, Sept. 1. In Oslo, once you're settled in your hotel (Grand, Continental, Bristol, and Viking are good), let everything else wait until you've been out to Bigdoy to see the magnificent Gokstad and Oseberg Viking ships in the museum that's been built to "fit" them. Don't miss the open-air Folk Museum here, a collection of 150 antique houses assembled to show you how earlier Norway lived (with built-in beds, folding tables and other woodworking ingenuities.)

For an idea of Norway's intense interest in pure art, see the National Gallery. Be sure to visit the Museum of Applied Art and the Historical Museum to see Norwegian antique furnishings before you pay the "must" visit to Artists' House, Wegelandsveien 17, where a special Cavalcade exhibit of latest arts and crafts is shown.

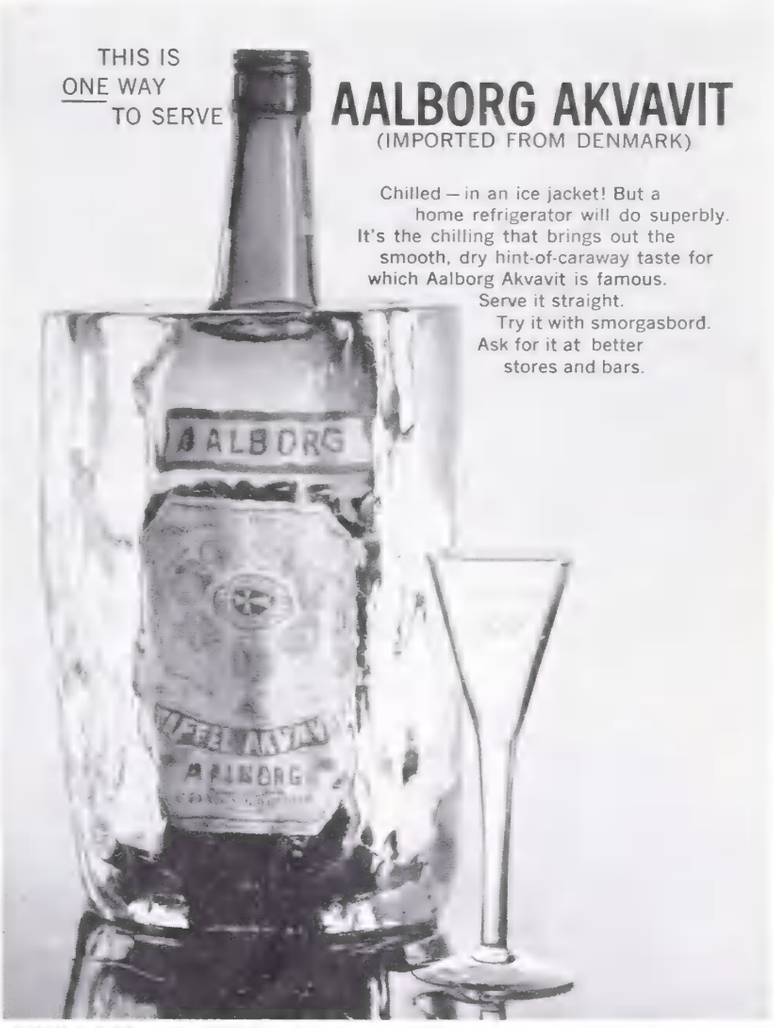
To see the best and shop, go to The Forum, Rosenkrantzgate 7, a permanent sales exhibit of the Oslo Trades and Industry Association; Norway Designs, Startinsgate 28, for home furnishings; the silver and jewelry shops of Norway's top silversmiths, David-Andersen, Karl Johansgate 20, and Tostrup, across the street (you can also visit their workshops); Den Norske Husflidsforening, a large store sponsored by the home crafts society, showing country-woven textiles, table linen, handknit sweaters, embroidery, tapestries; Rastad and Relling, Klingenberggate 4, for modern Norwegian furniture; Galligani, for glass and ceramics; Gresvig, Storgaten 20, for Norway's famous ski equipment. Other firm names to remember: for silver, Thune; for glass, Hadelands; for porcelain, Porsgrunds and Arnold Wiig.

Designer names to remember: for tapestries, Hanna Ryggen (the greatest), Sigrun Berg, Synnoeve Anker; for furniture, Rolf Rastad, Adolf Relling, Ludvig Aars, Alf Sture, Bendt Winge; for textile weaving, Ragna Breivik, Ingeborg Landheim, Annelise Knudtzon, Ragnhild Jacobsen, Elise Jakhelln, Grete Lein, Thorvald Lein; for enamel and silver, Arne and Greta Korsmo; for enamel, Sigurd Alf Eriksen; for glass, Willy Johansson, Arne Jon Justrum; for ceramics, Kaare B. Fjeldsaa, Konrad Galaaen, Dagny and Finn Hald, Erik Ploen, Eystein Sandnes; for lamps, Birger Dahl; for industrial design, Tias Eckhoff, Herman Bongard, Bjoern Engoe, Arne Lindaas; for sculptural wood and bone, Arne Tjomsland.

Include a day's outing to the old fortress town of Frederikstad, now an arts and crafts colony, to see designers and craftsmen at work and a permanent exhibit of crafts, under the aegis of the PLUS organization. It's an hour and three-quarters from Oslo by train.

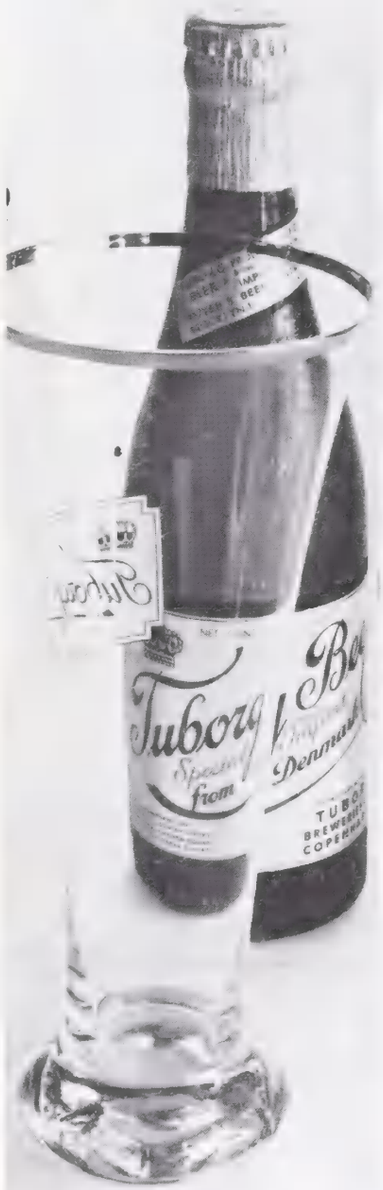
Squeeze in a visit to the Oslo City Hall to see its flamboyant and diversified artwork and, for its shock value, see the Vigeland sculpture in Frogner Park.

All four Scandinavian countries have "Meet the People" programs. The Norwegian Travel Association, H. Heyerdahlsgate 1, in Oslo is delighted to arrange for you to spend an evening with a Norwegian family in their home.



Sept. 2. Leave Oslo at 8 A.M. and fly to Stockholm, arriving 9:30 A.M. (Among Stockholm's many good hotels are the Grand, Palace, Bromma, and the new Foresta, which is about 15 minutes from town.) A morning orientation trip might include a tour of the Old Town, which dates from the 13th Century and is now undergoing a sensible preservation program, the Riddarholm Church and of course the magnificent City Hall. In the afternoon, fast as you can, get to the National Museum, where there is a most comprehensive collection of Swedish arts and crafts, old and modern, and a Special Cavalcade exhibit of modern Swedish jewelry. Another good first look at Swedish design would be a visit to Stockholm's great department store, NK (Nordiska Kompaniet), which has its own weaving establishment as well as an assortment of the best in home furnishings. Nearby, stroll through Kungstradgarden Park, where selected pieces of arts and crafts are beautifully displayed in show cases during the Swedish Cavalcade season (from Sept. 1 through 30).

Sept. 3, 4, 5, 6. In Stockholm. Make a morning visit to the brand-new School of Arts, Crafts and Industrial Design and see a display of student work at the school's Design Center.



Drive one afternoon to Drottningholm, royal summer home, and the unique 18th-century Court Theater with its novel, still usable stage machinery. Stop for lunch en route at Vallingbyhus where you'll see the newest apartment development.

Another day, fly (in one hour) to the medieval and Hanseatic ruined town of Visby on the Island of Gotland, for a taste of the past to contrast with the present.

Also visit St. Erik's Fair, Stockholm's international trade fair which is on at this time. Be sure to have a meal or a drink at The Golden Peace (Den Gyldene Freden) in the Old Town. Other restaurants not to be missed are Riche's, Berns, and the Gondolen for the novelty of eating in a suspended bubble high above town.

Spend one evening with a Swedish family. This is arranged by the Swedish Tourist Traffic Association, Klara V. Kyrkogata 3A, Stockholm.

But give yourself plenty of time to go see the special Cavalcade exhibits in the shops and studios of designers and artists, and in the shops maintained by some manufacturers. Notable in general for home furnishings are Svenskt Tenn, Standvagen 5A, the distinguished shop of designer Estrid Ericson featuring designs by Josef Frank, and Hantverket, Brunkebergstorg 13. For furniture, Carl Malmsten, Strandvagen 5B; Dux, Utstallningen, Vasagatan 9; Mobelhuset, Roslagsgatan 8; Gunnar Olssons Mobler, Hornsgatan 85; Svenska Mobelfabrikerna, Myntgatan 4. For textiles, Elsa Gullberg, Hamngatan 7; Marta Maas Fjetterstrom, Myntgatan 5; Robert Ditzinger, Norrmalmstorg 18, and Vasterlanggatan 72-74; Handarbetets Vanner Licium, Birger Jarlsgatan 18. For ceramics, Gustavsbergs Fabriker, Birger Jarlsgatan 2; Rorstrands Porslinsfabriker, Birger Jarlsgatan 16. For jewelry and silverware, Hovjuvelerare K. Anderson, Arsenalsgatan 13; Operahuset, W. A. Bolin, Sturegatan 12; Atelier Borgila AB, Sturegatan 24; Hugo Stromdahl AB, Birger Jarlsgatan 22. For stainless steel tableware, Gense, Master Samuelsgatan 2. For textiles, embroidery, and homecrafted needlework, you must be sure to visit the Hemslojsforbundet, Kungsgatan 31, and Svensk Hemslojd, Sveavagen 44, shops sponsored by the national societies of arts and crafts.

Top Swedish designer names to remember so you can look for their work when you shop are: For furniture: Bruno Mathsson, Carl-Axel Acking, Karl-Erik Ekselius, John Kandell, Sven Engstrom and Gunnar Myrstrand, Carl Malmsten, Ynge Ekstrom. For ceramics: Stig Lindberg, Bernt Friberg, Carl Harry Stalhane, Ingrid and Erich Triller, Signe Persson-Melin, Wilhelm Kage, Hertha Hillfon. For weaving: Alice Lund, Astrid Sampe, Viola Grasten, Ingrid Dessau, Edna Martin, Age Faith-Ell. For glass: Sven Palmqvist, Vicke Lindstrand, Erik Hoglund, Nils Landberg, Bengt Orup. For metal: Sigurd Persson, Wiwen Nilsson, Sven Arne Gillgren, Pierre Forssell. For stainless steel: Folke Arstrom.

Parenthetical note: These five days in Stockholm give you the heart of the Swedish Design Cavalcade, but the city of Gothenburg is also participating in the season with a textile exhibit at the Rohss Museum of Arts and Crafts and with special exhibits in art galleries and craft shops. And in Malmo in southern Sweden the Malmo Museum will have three special exhibits simultaneously: a Design Cavalcade of Southern Sweden, featuring the arts and crafts of their region; a combined display of the latest ceramics of Signe Persson-Melin, the textiles of Ingrid Dessau, and the glassware of Erik Hoglund; plus an exhibit of souvenirs from southern Sweden.

In the evening of Sept. 6 leave Stockholm by overnight steamer for Turku, Finland.

Sept. 7, 8. From Turku, at 9 in the morning, take a train to Finland's showplace resort, Hotel Aulanko on Lake Vanajavesi, arriving around noon. Make this your base for visiting the nearby crafts center of Hameenlinna, birthplace of Sibelius and birthplace also of Finland's magnificent glass. You can visit the two famous glass works, Iittala and Notsjoe (called Nuutajarvi in Finnish), and the Wetterhof Handicraft School, to see the designers and craftsmen at work. Take a drive to the 13th-century Hattula Church to see the finest frescoes in Finland. Some time in these two days, preferably before dinner, give yourself the relaxing experience of a sauna, Finland's famous steam bath. On the second day leave Hameenlinna by train at 6:31 P. M. for Helsinki, arriving there around 8 P. M.

Sept. 9, 10, 11. In Helsinki. (Good hotels are Palace, Vaakuna, Torni, Carlton.) For a good start and a rewarding over-all look at Finland's really exciting arts, crafts, and furnishings, make Stockmann's Department Store your first visit. (You'll also find the biggest book store in the world.) Take one morning to see the Waertsila-Arabia porcelain factory where some of the great ceramics designers have studios.

Shops you must visit are Artek, Kesku-katu 3, for fine furniture, lighting fixtures, silverware, textiles, tableware; Friends of Finnish Handicraft, Fabianinkatu 27, specializing in ryiji rugs, fine table linens, modern damask; Kalevala Koru, Keskuskatu 7, for choice Finnish jewelry; Inva, Mannerheimintie 44, for objects made by disabled war veterans; Ko Ke, Fredrikinkatu 57, and Kotiteollisuusaitta, Aleksanterinkatu 36, for textiles. When you shop, remember these outstanding Finnish manufacturers' names: Metsovaara for textiles, rugs, wonderful woven screen cloths; Tampella for linen damask; Printex for printed fabrics; Stockmann-Orno for lighting fixtures; Waertsila-Notjoe and Karhula-Iittala for glass.

Top Finnish designers in ceramics are Rut Bryk, Kaj Franck, Birger Kaipiainen, Toini Muona, Kyllikki Salmenhaara, Oiva Toikka; in glass, Kaj Franck, Timo Sarpaneva, Tapio Wirkkala; in textiles, Eva Antilla, Kirsti Ilvessalo, Maija Isola, Dora Jung, Timo Sarpaneva, Uhra Simberg, Liisa Suvanto; in furniture, Alvar Aalto, Olli Borg, Olavi Hanninen, Antti Nurmesniemi, Ilmari Tapiovaara; in printed textiles, Vuokko Eskolin; in silver and metalwork, Bertel Gardberg; in lighting fixtures, Lisa Johansson-Pape, Yki Nummi.

Sights worth seeing in Helsinki include the Olympic Stadium, the Children's Hospital, the railway station designed by Eliel Saarinen, Seurasaari Outdoor Museum of old Finnish architecture, and Helsinki suburbs where modern apartment buildings are built in sylvan settings. Break sightseeing with lunch on top of the Torni Hotel. Be sure to have at least one meal at Kalastajatorppa in Munkkiniemi.

The Finnish Tourist Association, Mikonkatu 15A, Helsinki, can arrange for you to spend an evening in a Finnish home.

There will be Cavalcade exhibits everywhere, but the main exhibition of the Finnish Design Cavalcade, sponsored by the national arts and crafts society, will open on September 11 (continuing through the 27th) at the National Art Gallery on Railway Square. You can be in on the opening, and still have plenty of time to catch the 6:30 P. M. plane back to Stockholm, en route to Denmark.

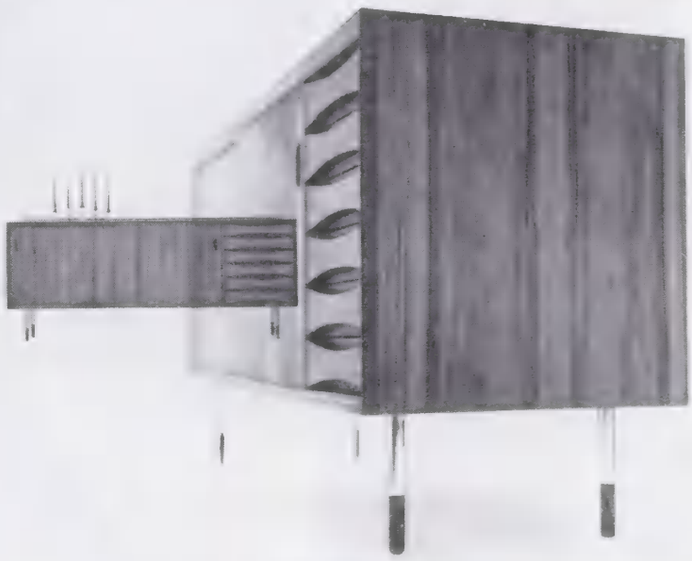
From Helsinki to Stockholm is about a 70-minute flight, so we'd have you arrive there about 7:40 P. M., ready to take an overnight train to Nybro, the station for your Cavalcade visit to the Orrefors glass works in Sweden.

Sept. 12. You arrive in Nybro at 7 A. M. and taxi to Orrefors, the most glamorous of glass works. Designers and craftsmen explain the techniques of glass-making. There's an entrancing museum of glass through the ages, magnificently presented. The Kosta and Strombergshyttan glass factories are also nearby.

In the afternoon, go from here, a couple of hours' train ride, to the historic town of Kalmar to visit its charming castle.

Sept. 13. Leave Kalmar at 9 A.M. by train to travel through the chateau country of southern Sweden to Helsingborg where the train takes the ferry to Denmark and Copenhagen, arriving about 6 P.M. This is an auspicious night for arriving in Copenhagen, for it is the final night of the season at the fabulous pleasure park of Tivoli. So plan to see this after your first Danish dinner (we'd arbitrarily have it at Wivex, Vesterbrogade 3, to be near the big doings). Good old-world luxury hotels in Copenhagen are the Palace, d'Angleterre, and King of Denmark.

Sept. 14, 15, 16. As a restful interlude in a long itinerary, and because you should see more of Denmark than Copenhagen, we'd suggest leaving Copenhagen, 8 A.M. on the 14th, for a three-day motor tour through the fairy-tale countryside. (Go with a group or on your own.) The first day takes you to the medieval capital of Roskilde, to Trelleborg where the Vikings held forth, by ferry to Nyborg, and through Funen, a country of old manor houses and castles, to Odense, the quaint birthplace of Hans Christian Andersen, to spend the night.



Second day, you drive through Funen to Jutland, stop off at Ribe where the storks perch on the chimneys, then to Vejle and Jelling, ancient seat of the Viking Kings. You stay overnight in Vejle.

Third day, to Aarhus, and the fascinating "Old Town," an open-air museum of houses re-creating Danish town life in the 16th Century. Return to Copenhagen by overnight steamer or train.

Sept. 17, 18, 19, 20. Next morning in Copenhagen make your first stop the annual exhibition of the Danish Society of Arts and Crafts, a focal point of the Danish Design Cavalcade. It's held in the building called Charlottenborg, headquarters of the Danish Academy of Fine Arts.

After lunch, we'd beat an immediate path to Den Permanente on Vesterport, one of the most exciting shops in the world, for it combines a store with a permanent display of Denmark's very finest design in furniture, ceramics, silver, and textiles. Everything shown there has been screened for excellence, and it will give you the most comprehensive view of modern Danish design. It's a place you should really go independently, but you can see it on an organized tour that also includes the famous silversmithy of Georg Jensen, Ostergade 40, the great home furnishings shop of Illums Bolighus, Amagertorv 10, and the Saxbo Stoneware Workshop of ceramist Nathalie Krebs.

September 18 should find you bright and early at the opening of the Copenhagen Cabinetmakers' Guild annual show of modern Danish furniture.

Besides the shops mentioned, other stores you must visit are:

For silver: A. Michelsen, Bredgade 11; Hans Hansen, Amagertorv 11; Just Andersen, Amagertorv 4; Hingelberg. For ceramics: Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Manufactory, Amagertorv 6, and Bing and Grondahl, Amagertorv 2, especially for tableware and porcelain figurines. For wood accessories and toys: Kay Bojesen, Bredgade 47. For hand-crafted fabrics and printed textiles and embroideries: Haandarbejdets Fremme, Kongens Nytorv 30, the shop of the home crafts society; Dansk Kunstflidsforening, Nikolaj Plads 5, a government-sponsored shop of needlework. For furniture: Den Permanente stocks fine pieces, takes orders, and can direct you to individual workshops. For furs (mink is the bargain): A. C. Bange, Ostergade 27: Birger Christensen, Ostergade 38.

Top names in Danish design are: For furniture: Hans Wegner, Borge Mogensen, Bender Madsen, Ejner Larsen, Peter Hvidt, O. Molgaard-Nielsen, Finn Juhl, Ib Kofod-Larsen, Tove and Edvard Kindt-Larsen, Ole Wanscher, Mogens Koch, Ludvig Pontoppidan. For silver: Hans Hansen, Harald Nielsen, Erik Herlow, Ibbi Trier-Morck, Magnus Stephensen, Sigvard Bernadotte, Henning Koppel, Jens Quistgaard, Aage Helbig Hansen, Karl Gustav Hansen. For textiles: Helga Foght, Marie Gudme Leth, Lise Plum, Arne Jacobsen. For ceramics: Nathalie Krebs, Ebbe Sadolin, Axel Bruel, Richard Kjaergaard, Jacob E. Bang, Bjorn Wiinblad, Eva Staehr-Nielsen, H. Kahler.

The 19th being Saturday and an early-closing day for shops, take a full-day tour of North Zealand, driving to Elsinore and Hamlet's castle, stopping by at Frederiksborg Castle, now the National Historical Museum. See also the new Louisiana Museum of Art at Humlebaek on the Danish Riviera. (You might come here earlier, on Aug. 31, and stay for a two-week course in Danish arts and crafts given by the Danish Society of Arts and Crafts and Industrial design. $250 with board, lodging.)

You're scheduled to leave Copenhagen on the 20th, but some time during your stay you must try these restaurants: Coq d'Or, H. C. Andersens Boulevard 13; Det Gyldne Lam in Nyhavn; Oskar Davidsen's, Aaboulevard 56; Seven Nations, Raadhuspladsen 4; Seven Little Homes, Jernbanegade 4; Krog's, Gammelstrand.

You must, of course, visit in a Danish home. The National Travel Association of Denmark office, Banegaardspladsen 5, Copenhagen, will see to this for you.

In Denmark you are specially invited to bring the kids. There's a daily pick-up and delivery service by a daytime Junior-sitting outfit. At the Pernilles Bornehotel for $2.50 a day you can park the youngsters for a day or a month.

Time schedules suggested are based on train, plane, and bus services, but much of the ground might be covered by car. Many of the leading car-hire firms are represented here. Autourist, 55 W. 54 St., New York, does an especially good job and can give you more information. Swedish National Railways can arrange for you to pick up cars at railroad stations for local sightseeing. Write to Scandinavian Railways, 630 Fifth Ave., New York, for details. You can also use-and-purchase a Swedish Saab or Volvo and ship it home.

Here's the money picture in Scandinavia. The Danish krona equals about 14¢; Norwegian krone, about 14¢; Swedish krona, about 19¢. You get about 320 Finnish Marks to the dollar.

For more information write to the following New York offices: Danish National Travel Offices, 588 Fifth Ave.; Finnish National Travel Office, 10 East 40 St.; Norwegian National Travel Office, 290 Madison Ave.; Swedish National Travel Office, 630 Fifth Ave.

SEASON YOUR COOKING WITH SCANDINAVIA

pastry that's a wonderful little mouthful.

All Scandinavians are herring-happy, and don't say you don't like herring until you've tried it in one of their delish sauces—dill, mustard, tomato, or wine. They also share a common genius for making boiled codfish and potatoes a delightful meal. Sour cream and dill are favorite flavors. If you read a Scandinavian recipe calling for pepper, be sure to use white pepper, for that is their pet. And it is a definite flavor. Ginger, allspice, mustard, caraway seeds, paprika, fresh horseradish, curry, tarragon, and bay leaves are their main seasoners.

Almonds are in everything from meat to fruit. And when they thicken a sauce, they use potato flour. It makes a glisteny sauce with no lumps, no fuss, and very little cooking. I use Scandia pure potato starch flour, produced by Scandia Finer Foods Co., San Francisco.

They also love the lingonberry preserve—a flavor between a currant and a cranberry—and the unusual cloudberry.

The Swedes also use rose hips, a great source of vitamin C, which they make into an enticing soup. These are imported dry and there's even a ready-mix rose hip soup.

It wouldn't be a smorgasbord without a bottle of akvavit for those who like a little "snaps," as they call it. There should also be beer, which goes so well with this kind of food and is usually drunk with snaps. It's fun to serve the akvavit frozen within a cylinder of ice. (Page 104 shows you how.)

When you go to market for your party, select your foods with a mental picture of color in your mind, for the visual effect of a smorgasbord should be as wonderful as it tastes.

Eggs are all-important. I prefer mine hard-cooked for the buffet table, but the Danes use raw egg yolks to decorate many dishes.

A cheese tray is imperative. Try to get some Danish blue cheese. One with caraway seeds, called Kumminost, is also important. You should have all sorts of crisp bread—Norwegian Ideal Flat bread, Finn Crisp, which is a thin rye sour-dough cracker, and Ry-King from Sweden, also of rye flour but much different in flavor and texture. I always have rye bread, made in small, long loaves called "Party Rye." Also get pumpernickel or Danish rugbrod, squares of dark rye. I really prefer these dark breads for a "base" whenever bread is called for. I also have the baker make small, long loaves of French bread, both sour and regular, and have this sliced thinly and placed on the buffet table. And—another authentic note—always use unsalted butter! It makes your snacks a little different! Danish butter is the world's best, but it's imported only in limited quantities.

With trays of bread, all the varieties, lightly buttered, set out for the guests, they can build their own "Dagwoods."

You should also have bowls of sauces to complement your various meats and fish dishes. Sour cream for tomatoes and cucumbers. Horseradish sauce for the beef and dilled lamb. Curried mayonnaise for the beets and hard-cooked eggs and asparagus.

Also on the buffet table I like to have fish or shrimps or lobster. A smoked salmon is always a delicious treat. Try and have your gourmet shop order a small half for you. Serve with wedges of lemon, capers, white or black pepper, or a sour cream sauce. (Delicious frozen Danish lobster tails called "Skampies" are imported by Embassy Fisheries. It's worth searching out a store that carries them.)

The Scandinavians love the "kraftor"—and declare a holiday when the season opens in August. We know them as crayfish, crawfish or, in the midwest, as crawdads. There are millions of them in our rivers. In season Scandinavian food shops may have them, shipped from the midwest alive in ice packs. Cook in kettle of half water and half white wine with bay leaf and an onion.

If you are serving lobster, cut it across the body, so you have rounds or medallions of lobster. Arrange the slices carefully, surrounded by sliced, buttered French bread cut to size. Sour cream or curried mayonnaise is a happy addition. Shrimps and crab can be served the same way. Decorate with chopped parsley or dill or lettuce.

There are all sorts of cold meats you can serve. Found at the corner delicatessen, or in your chain store. I prefer to cook my own. Ham, pork, lamb, and chicken would be typical. I usually do not serve ham, but for a smorgasbord I buy the Danish canned Canadian-bacon type, which is round.

Lamb in Dill Sauce

1 boned leg of lamb
2 lamb shanks water to cover
12 white pepper corns
2 bay leaves
1 tablespoon dill seed ground in the mortar
3 stalks celery
1 onion
1 can Campbell's Scotch broth.

Wash or rinse meat in hot water, and put into a kettle that is not too big. I use a Descoware casserole and push the meat down with the bones and shanks on top. Add hot water, bring to a boil and skim, then add all the ingredients. Simmer in the oven for two to three hours or until tender. Cool and refrigerate over night. This lets you get all the fat off and serve it either hot or cold. If served cold, slice it paper thin and serve with horseradish sauce. Lamb's tongues done this way are also delicious.

To serve as a hot dish, take the lamb out of the broth, remove all the fat, bring the liquid to a boil and reduce it. Leave the shanks in the pot. When it is hot, skim well with paper towels. Allow it to cook or boil down for fifteen minutes, whizz in the blender (removing the lamb shanks, natch) and taste for seasoning. If your sauce needs thickening, use potato flour dissolved in a little cold water. Cut the lamb in slices, put into sauce and allow to heat. Serve with parsleyed and dilled new potatoes.

Chicken or Veal with Almonds

This is a dreamy dish, based on the Scandinavian yen for almonds.

Chicken or veal
Flour and paprika
2 cups of blanched almonds
½ pound mushrooms butter (approximately ¼ lb.)
1 teaspoon white pepper
1 tablespoon of sugar
4 cups of chicken broth
6 to 8 pounds of veal or
24 pieces of chicken
1 heaping tablespoon chopped chives

I like to make my own stock for this, but if you want to short-cut, use 4 cups of chicken broth. Blanch almonds in warm water and bring to a boil. Drain and skin them, cut into big pieces, three to four times across the almonds, then dump them into the chicken broth and simmer for half an hour. While this is going on, clean the mushrooms (or use canned ones), cut them in slices and sautée in butter for a few minutes. Put four tablespoons of flour and two of paprika into a paper bag and shake the meat or fowl in it. Remove the mushrooms from the pan, add more butter and sautée the meat or chicken. After the meat is nicely browned—use plenty of butter—put in the seasonings, the broth with almonds, and the mushrooms. Cover and put in a 300° oven for an hour to an hour and a half. Take the casserole out of the oven and put in a cool place. This dish can be done the day before your party. Refrigerate so you can get the fat off easily. If you are doing the dish the day of your party, pour off the juice and skim well. Heat the sauce and thicken with two to four tablespoons potato flour, depending on the amount of sauce. Meantime, slice the meat, or arrange the chicken on your serving tray and put in the oven to warm, but do not dry out. (I usually put a little sauce with the meat and cover with foil.) When the sauce has cooked for a few minutes, add the cream and heat, but do not boil. Bring out the serving tray with the fowl or meat, pour the hot sauce over all, and put on a warming tray on your buffet table. Serve with dilled new potatoes.

Roast of Pork with Prunes

Pork roast
White pepper
Ginger powder
8 prunes
2 stalks of celery
1 onion
1 carrot

Get a pork roast, either chops or the leg. I get the chops in one long piece, and allow two ribs per person, if small, one and a half per person, if large. Have the butcher cut the meat in order to insert the prunes. The cut should be at the base of the chop, where the bone comes round the meat. Insert the prunes, dust well with ginger and pepper and stand the roast in a covered casserole so that the bones are down and the cut side and fat are up. Put the diced or cubed vegetables around it, add a half cup of prune juice and a half cup of water. Cover and bake slowly in a 275° to 300° oven, allowing 45 minutes to the pound. When done, pour off the gravy, skim well, and while you are doing this your husband can be carving the meat. Remove the meat in one large piece from the bones, slice it thinly and place back on the bones. This is cut in the opposite direction or at right angles from a pork chop, similar to a rack or saddle of lamb. It is a little different way of slicing and makes it more interesting. Thicken the gravy with potato flour mixed with cold water and serve in a gravy boat. Browned potatoes, prunes, apple sauce, a green vegetable and a tossed green salad could go with this dish.

Sour cream Sauce

1 carton of sour cream (1 cup)
½ teaspoon Chef Howald's Seasoning salt
¼ teaspoon Spice Islands dill
¼ teaspoon Spice Islands Beaumonde
2 tablespoon of Spice Islands tarragon vinegar (white wine)
⅛ teaspoon salt
freshly ground white pepper
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 teaspoon parsley (chopped)
½ teaspoon chopped chives

Mix the dry ingredients in the sour cream, and slowly add the vinegar and the olive oil alternately. Lastly, after all is mixed well, add the chives and parsley. Put in covered container and refrigerate until ready to use. This is good with any cold vegetable.

For a good horseradish sauce, follow the directions on the jar of Spice Island's horseradish, or you can substitute sour cream for the whipped cream. If using sour cream, add 2 teaspoons of horseradish to one carton of sour cream and a half teaspoon of Chef Howald's seasoning salt. Let stand for an hour or more. You can make all these sauces in the morning and let them meld. A must with dilled lamb.

Dill Salad Dressing

2 hard boiled eggs
1 raw egg yolk
2 tablespoons of olive oil
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon tarrragon vinegar
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon chopped dill
1 cup of heavy cream
salt and white pepper

Fork the egg yolks up into small bits and mix with the raw egg yolk, until you have a smooth paste. Add olive oil and lemon juice and vinegar slowly, alternating them and stirring with pep. Add dry seasonings. Whip the cream and fold into the mixture. Chop egg whites and slowly fold those in. Good on fish, meats, salads.

Lastly, for dessert, if you know a good Danish bakery have them bake you up some Danish pastries to serve with coffee. However, you can make some dreamy desserts using lingonberry jam. Here is one.

Peach Tarts

Make deep puff-paste tarts
2 large packages of Philadelphia cream cheese
1 carton of half-and-half

Cream the cheese with the half-and-half so that it is the consistency of whipped cream. Store in the refrigerator until an hour before serving time. Then take it out and bring to room temperature.

Open two cans of Fruitful Valley nectar peaches packed by Geo. Noroian Co., Dinuba, Calif. Drain, and boil down the syrup to a thick consistency. Add the lingonberry jam and heat to the melting point. Keep hot until ready to serve.

Put a generous portion of creamed cheese in the bottom of the tart shell, place half a peach cut side down on top of the cream cheese. Pour over a generous amount of the sauce and serve immediately. This recipe is for 16.

Products available here

CLOGGED TOILETS
in a jiffy!

NEVER AGAIN that sick feeling when your toilet overflows

'TOILAFLEX'
Toilet ALL-ANGLE Plunger

Ordinary plungers just don't seat properly. They permit compressed air and water to splash back. Thus you not only have a mess, but you lose the very pressure you need to clear the obstruction.

With "Toilaflex", expressly designed for toilets, no air or water can escape. The full pressure plows through the clogging mass and swishes it down. Can't miss!

- Double-size cup, double-pressure
- Tapered tail gives air-tight fit
- Designed to flex at any angle
- Centers itself, can't skid around

For positive insurance against stuffed toilet, have a "Toilaflex" in your home.

Why YOU Are The Editor

While you are reading this magazine you are the editor, for you are making a decision that will affect many people.

Here's Why.

If you enjoy this magazine you will buy it again. Perhaps you will tell a friend about a special story, or feature, or article you read. Then she will buy it. And so our circulation will grow.

Watching that growth is the ABC—the Audit Bureau of Circulation; the governing body among publishers that sets circulation standards and audits the official figures on magazine and newspaper sales.

The ABC not only audits those sales figures, but watches subscription methods closely, to avoid misrepresentation.

Because you pay good money for this magazine you are extra important; to our advertisers, to our editors, and to the ABC.

the total output of his designs is almost meager. But there is a consistent excellence in what he does produce. For just as in his conversation he speaks only when he has something meaningful to say, he releases a design only when he feels that it is needed and when he has brought it as close to perfection as his best efforts may make possible.

That much abused word, integrity, applies aptly to this man, and his furniture reflects the personal values he seems to live by. His own fame doesn't seem to have come through to him. If his success has done anything, it seems to have made him more aware than ever of his responsibility as a designer in the tradition of his late mentor, the great designer Kaare Klint.

Revolt against imitation

Klint in Denmark, like his Swedish counterpart, Professor Carl Malmsten, was one of the guiding lights in modern furniture design. He led the revolt against the imitation of past forms; he preached that honest materials honestly used solve human needs with directness and beauty. To list those who came under his influence is to list some of the most distinguished designers in Denmark and in the world—Borge Mogensen, Bender Madsen, Ejner Larsen, Peter Hvidt, O. Molgaard Nielsen, Finn Juhl, Kofod-Larsen, Tove and Edvard Kindt-Larsen, Professor Ole Wanscher, Professor Mogens Koch, the late Jacob Kjaer, and the man who is currently the greatest world influence on furniture design—Hans Wegner.

WALL STORAGE UNITS

Wealth of detailing in BB cabinets

Flip-up mirror in this cosmetic drawer is typical of the ingenious design in the BB Cabinet System. Placed at right height, it can be used with chair as substitute dressing table. The drawers come in two different sizes: 4" deep, (right) and 6¾" (below).

Adjustable storage is obtained with easy-to-change dividers that can be used in a great variety of ways or even removed completely. The space can be divided in either small or large sections.

Careful detailing such as brass clothes and shoe rods adds a custom look, yet largest and most complex cabinet can be assembled by two men in about an hour and a half.

Hardwood slides hold shelves as well as the drawers. They fit holes drilled in cabinet walls at regular intervals. Rearrangement of units or the addition of new ones takes no trouble and very little time.

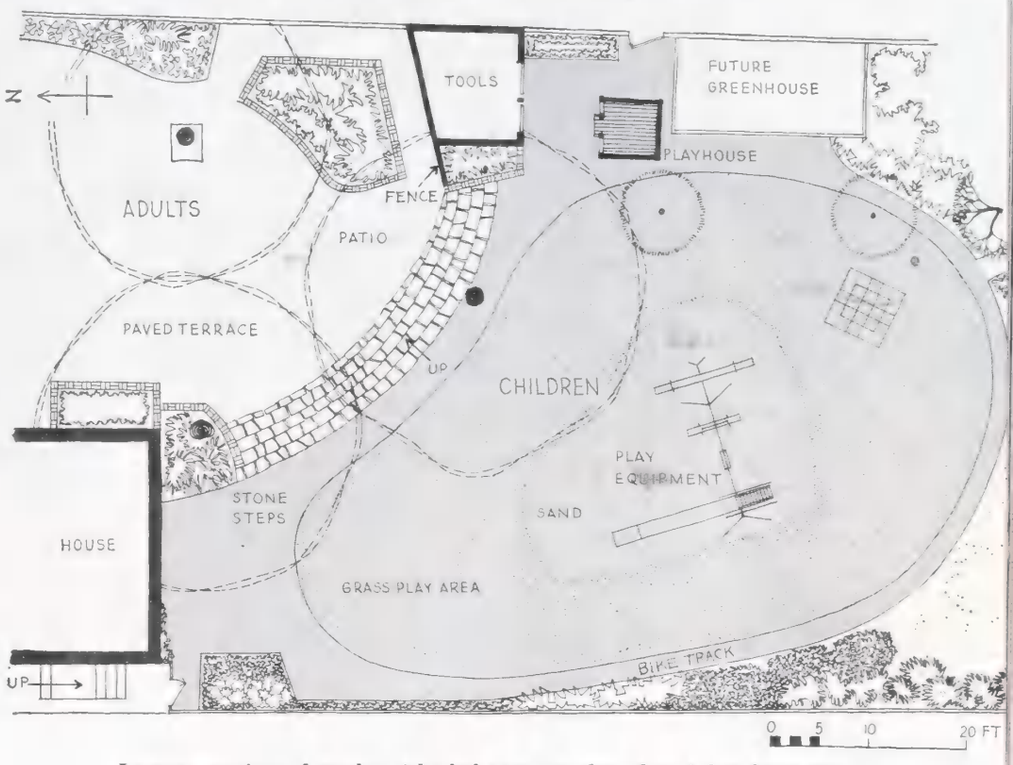
House Beautiful's

Gardens for better living

You can have outdoor rooms for both children and adults

● When children have their own place to play, both adults and children are happier. This is as true out-of-doors as inside the house. But rarely do you find the separation achieved as invisibly as is done in this garden designed by Landscape Architects Marie and Arthur Berger.



The upper terrace, for adults, adjoins the house, and because it doesn't have to do double duty as a play yard, it can easily be kept attractive, inviting, and always ready to use for lounging or eating out-of-doors. The lower level is for children and has so many facilities that they have little interest in the upper terrace. The steps form a strong psychological barrier meanwhile making it impossible to bring wheeled toys near the adults. There is a complete loop of paving for riding bikes and cars, a play house, sand pile, swing set, and trees to climb. All of the land beyond the upper terrace is used for play. It can all be seen from the terrace except for the play house, which is screened from view by a louvered fence. When necessary, the inevitable clutter of toys can quickly be put out of sight.

is curving sweep of gentle steps bridges the two races to make them both part of the same over-all rden, yet effectively keeps the wheeled toys (and refore the children) on a lower level. The upper race for the adults is convenient to the house and ltered by it. Both areas are generously shaded by large trees. Home of Dr. and Mrs. Joe Roberts.

There's a wonderfully endless road here for bikes, trikes, and cars —it serves also as a mowing strip for the play lawn it encircles. The sandy play space under the swing set will be replaced by lawn when the children are old enough to take on croquet and badminton.

Largest portion of garden (shaded area on plan above) has been set aside for children's play, but designers kept future needs in mind. Even the children's play house, now screened from the adults by a louvered fence, will have a second life—as a garden work center.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

This terrace is always inviting for outdoor living because it doesn't have to serve also as a play area. The children's terrace is beyond on the lower level, so the play is near enough to be supervised but not close enough to be disturbing. The expanse of paving is easy to maintain, and its hard look is softened by border planting, tree wells, and contrast of textures.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY ERNEST BRAUN

When the sky is the roof and you live among the growing trees and shrubs in the garden, your ideas of the scale to use outdoors must be drastically revised. Though several times larger than any room indoors, these terraces don't look too extensive, add greatly to the total living space.

You can't have too big a terrace

The large adjoining terrace extends the apparent size of the room, directs eye to the view. Owners: Mr. and Mrs. Patrick H. Peabody. Landscape Architect: Lawrence Halprin.

● That there is a vast difference between indoor and outdoor scale most terraces unhappily prove. A 15 by 20-foot area that would seem ample indoors can seem small and cramped outdoors, where the vast scale of trees and sky must be reckoned with. These are facts that the landscape architect knows from experience. You'll notice that where space permits he will always design terraces on a grand scale. If you are designing your own, an excellent rule of thumb is to imagine the size of the largest living room you could possibly want, and then double it. This way you'll get the kind of space that you can really use and enjoy.

Almost all of the garden we show here is used for terraces and has become useful space for outdoor living. Maintenance is thereby kept to a minimum. And, of course, there's plenty of room for occasional large gatherings. To avoid monotony different levels have been used—the upper for sun and view, the lower for shade and seclusion. Variety is gained by the contrasting pavings of brick and concrete, built-in seats, walls of wood and stone, fences and planting beds.

Sound talk about water and weather

For the season when you must water, here's the why, where, when, and how of irrigation order to understand and well mber the practice and theory ratering, let us return to the when all plants lived in the r. After some eons certain s apparently wanted to go re. They developed roots as a fast operation against the of the sea. Some with such itive roots survive today.

ns passed before the fern, an- r of nearly all our garden es, devised a new survival Little food or water passes gh the bark of a root. There- the root tip developed a habit owing faster than the bark by a fraction of an inch each day, l and able to absorb nourish- . The race between the bark he root tip is one of the most ficant events in plant life. In ip begins the feeding process turns the minerals of the soil organic matter, into food and or animals and man. The ferns ned the gymnosperms, which are represented on earth e needled evergreens: pine, e and yew. These conifers (or bearers) gave us wood and a resinous sap.

dern plants appeared next the most efficiency of all— hairs. Each a single naked quarter inch long, nearly in- e to the eye, the hairs grow e root tip and increase its g capacity eightfold. So much ackground. Now, what about plants out in the garden?

inch of moisture a week is dered the average necessary igh production, and summer is only part of the story. A garden soil, well supplied humus, dead and dying plant nd good drainage, can hold 60 per cent of its substance in. Pure peat moss, humus lf-decayed vegetable matter, old several times their weight in water. A deep-growing mulch of straw, leaves, sawdust or other material is a great boon in a dry climate. By storing rains with such materials in my garden near New York City I have managed, in fortunate years, to keep the place in production all season without watering at all.

There are liabilities in watering too much or too soon. The nutrients in the soil, artificial and natural, are soluble in water, of course; the plant's roots absorb their nourishment almost entirely in the form of a thin chemical soup. Hence, water flowing through the earth leaches them down into the subsoil and away. True, most of them dissolve only slowly; commercial fertilizers are so stabilized that they remain over weeks and months, but ultimately they feed plants or wash away.

A soil can become waterlogged and stagnant. When it does, the plants rooted in it soon stop growing. For land plants, unlike true water plants, need oxygen around their roots—so gardens need good drainage and flower pots must have holes in the bottom.

Water must flow

As long as water flows through the earth all is well, for flowing water contains oxygen, not in air bubbles only, but also in solution. Then the skies pour on rain. The earth becomes bogged, and the ground water ceases to flow. Its oxygen feeds away, and the water in the soil becomes stagnant. After a day or two the plants can feed no more. Eventually, if conditions do not improve, they starve to death in the midst of plenty. Remember this: a wet spring has dangers, for, when it does not kill, it retards root growth. Everything appears to stand still, and this is about what happens. If, now, there comes a summer drought, the damage may be quick and wholesale. This is one event in which it is necessary to be fast with the watering hose, but first let the plants show you their need by wilting.

Even a dry spring, in our climate, is better than a wet one. A spring a trifle on the dry side, with rains well spaced, is best. In such a season roots will grow incredibly. A mere carrot in deep soil will send its roots down seven feet. A perennial in such a season grew a root system which, counting every hair, totaled 100 miles. These roots are down where the damp is stored, and summer drought can do little harm to herbage with such roots.

Hence, the transcendent rule in watering is this: Never sprinkle your lawn, garden, or flower bed.

Soak it. Sprinkling generally does more harm than good, for it encourages the roots to crowd near the surface where the pickings are best; then if the July rains fail, the plants can only starve. Soak the soil at least ten inches deep.

Roots grow fastest during the days when the soil is drying out after a good rain; the whole garden makes a sudden leap forward. This boom will continue for a week or more without rain. The greater part of any plant's nourishment enters the roots as a liquid, but it can also take in a little by a dry feeding process, the molecule of food takes an electrolytic leap right through the skin of the root tip like a flea that has found its dog.

When drought really sets in, however, the plant gets ready for it. Growth practically stops. Chemical changes take place in the cells and the bark grows over the root tip. The entire organization toughens up for a seige. My notion is that this is not a bad event for most growing things, as long as it is not too prolonged. Unless the crops show sure signs of misery—such as wilting—it is just as well to wait ten days or two weeks before the first watering. Let them toughen up, for life in this leathery world is hard. Of course, show some judgment: if the soil is sandy and does not hold much water, if the vegetables are still small with few miles of roots, it may be essential to water earlier.

Comes a rain and the plant relaxes into its born determination to grow with all speed. We do not want our growing things to expend their energy preparing for hard times or else relaxing back to normal in a now up, now down, "but never jam today" cycle, so it is recommended that we soak the earth once a week until the storms come again.

Don't wait for clouds

There was a time when watering with the sun shining on the garden was considered evil, but I have never seen any harm in it, nor has a director of a botanical garden I know, so I have put this one away into the book of agricultural superstitions—a big book, by the way, and older than Lilith.

There are a number of sprinklers that are satisfactory, but I think the best watering tool is not a sprinkler, but a soaker: it is a long sausage of porous material which one attaches to the hose and places between the rows, where it slowly seeps water into the earth.

If you do use a spray, turn it to a fine drizzle, for plants do thrive when knocked around. some gardens one can irrigate w with no attachment on the hos place a stone or board under t stream from the hose to ho against erosion.

We have explored all the ba ground necessary to discuss tra plating along our way here, so us close out that subject while are at it.

Transplanting normally sets plant back by ten days. This s back may be shortened by da a week perhaps, if you feed plant as soon as it is set out w one of the new liquid fertilize used for foliar feeding.

The aim in transplanting is disturb the roots as little as p sible, to keep business going as usual during the moving. If can, take a good chunk of ea with the roots. If the plant is sm enough, the transfer is easy; t it with such a large spadeful earth that the working root pa are not aware that anything happened. Plants that have b grown in pots transplant with trouble.

To transplant bare root

If you must transplant a sp men with bare roots that is no a dormant state—roses, wo plants, bulbs, corms and other terials commonly arrive from nurseryman in this conditio slosh the roots in a gooey m puddle or thick clay soup until roots are well muddied before plant. Dig your planting hole la enough for the root spread give them space as you fill.

Seedlings started in a place a from their permanent stand ready to transplant as soon as t have developed true leaves. W set, the plant needs a good soal —a pint or more for a ton plant, for example. Then, no m water for a week; let the r feed. For obvious reasons, it is to transplant on a cool, over day. In fair weather the after is best. If the sun is strong and must get the job done, plac shade over the planting fo couple of days.

Some plants, for all prac purposes, are not able to en the shock of transplanting—b corn, lupine, peas, sweet pumpkins, squash, and others

The larger moral in this a might be stated so: there is a of letting your garden alone the work that is necessary, bu yond that just hold still and for the spirit.

s and costs of shipping: rnational parcel post is the economical and easiest way hip packages under $250 in e. They come right through ut service charge, delivered u by postman upon payment uty. If you've declared these s to follow you and they are in your exemption, notify the gage Section of the Custom e so that arrangement may be to clear them against your gage Declaration. For those d beyond $250, you'll need ke the postal notice to the oms House and obtain Bag- Declaration for entry. If val- at more than $1.000 (for per- use) or more than $500 (if personal), you must fill out ecial Customs Invoice (Form 5515).

packages: An unsolicited or someone back home, valued $10, can be mailed duty free, will not be counted against exemption. Limits: one a day, o the same person; no per- , alcohol, or tobacco.

Air shipments: Rates for air parcel post, and for air freight as quoted by the Scandinavian Airlines Systems, run as follows: For air parcel post, 85¢ to $1.02 for the first four ounces and 47¢ to 51¢ for each additional four ounces, depending upon the country; for air freight, $1.45 per pound for shipments under 100 pounds and $1.09 for shipments over 100 pounds to $1.62 per pound for shipments under 100 pounds and $1.22 for shipments over 100 pounds.

There is an $8.00 minimum on shipments to New York and a $9.00 minimum to interior points. Air freight is cleared through customs at the international airport or closest inland customs port.

Sea freight: The general cargo rates are now a little under 2¢ per pound and $1.13 per cubic foot. Approximate charges on a minimum shipment (220 pounds or 10 cubic feet), range from $10 to $15. Clear sea freight through customs at the incoming pier.

Customs brokers: Reputable firms or persons (licensed by the Government to serve the importing public) can help you get your big freight shipments home without red-tape entanglements. The cost of their services adds only from 10% to 15% to the price of your purchases (if small ones) and much less to shipments of greater value. They can save you more than that in preventing costly mistakes. If anything occurs to involve a broker's time, your fee will vary accordingly. Engaged before you leave, a broker here will take care of all clearance formalities, handle your papers, place them before the U.S. Customs, and arrange to have shipments delivered to you.

Trademarks: Find out in advance of purchase if any product you want has a registered trademark in Washington. Many products, including certain precious-metal ware, cameras, phonograph records, perfume, cannot be brought in without the permission of the trademark owner. For a list of trademarked products, write to Bureau of Customs, Washington, D.C. Also request "United States CUSTOM HINTS," a leaflet of helpful tips.

THE BEAUTY THAT COMES WITH COMMON SENSE

fit of a good jury system, which judges and criticizes their work for sale or for exhibitions. Juries are experienced, carefully chosen, serious people, broadly versed in subjects they are judging, often craftsmen in their own right. Juries are not "loaded," as so often happens here in America.

Artists and designers in Scandinavia work in a very favorable social climate. They have the stimulus (and honor) of important exhibitions, occurring at home and abroad. Exhibitions are taken far more seriously in Scandinavia than in the United States. They have an alive, alert, critical lay audience, who will scrimp and save to own a piece by the artist they admire. Thus they have an unearned increment of honor, quite different from the celebrity-ism of the publicized name-designer in the United States. (In the U. S., being a celebrity does not mean that people honor you; they merely know your name and the subject you are associated with. Here, being a "big-name" designer does not imply that people choose or discriminate between you and your opposite number in your craft, trade, or profession.) In Scandinavia, the name-designers have critical, discriminating lay followers who can say that a designer's work last year was better than his work this year. This has a most salutary effect.

Scandinavian designing has not lost contact with its human application as it has tended to do in America. When that happens, it becomes "design for the sake of design." In Scandinavia they are not designing in a vacuum—or solely for a professional audience.

Time stimulates design

Industry in Scandinavia knows the value of pure creativity, as opposed to commercial creativity. Consequently many of the big corporations "keep" a stable of artists, literally, for the inspiration they may give—now or later. They do not mind if artists are ten years ahead of their time or if the things they make do not sell for ten years after they were created.

As Johann Beyer, the president of Orrefors, put it in a speech made in England to the Council of Industrial Design: "To try to introduce an entirely new trend in design simply through ordinary sales channels has proved to be very difficult. The very new, unusual things have a tendency to scare off the store buyers instead of attracting them, whereas a recognized museum exhibition may clear the way to make the general public susceptible to the new ideas."

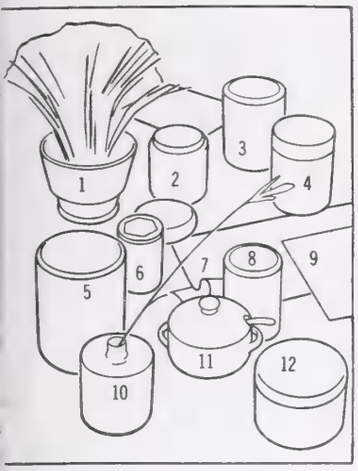
Sales can wait

Scandinavian manufacturers can wait. Their designers don't get fired if a new series does not have an immediate sales success. Arabia in Finland, Rorstrand, Gustavsberg, and Orrefors in Sweden are examples of firms willing to let their designers work at their own artistic pace.

(In the U.S. slow artistic production is not understood by industrial management. U. S. manufacturers don't realize that good, timeless designs have to mature, as a child matures. U. S. artists don't realize new designs must not be rootless—if they are to have a future life, even ten years later.)

Aura of respect

The artists and industrial designers of Scandinavia also have had a most favorable working climate. Still quoting the president of Orrefors: "The requirements of our designers have been, since 1916, to make something beautiful, make something new, take all the time you wish, work when and how you wish. No work could have been more unrestricted . . . As a result the demand for our glass is considerable, the supply insufficient."



This atmosphere of confidence of respect, of honor, of freedom, of informed, critical understanding from both public and manufacturer has brought about a real flowering of contemporary design.

Where to find Scandinavian merchandise

Throughout this issue you will see home furnishings, accessories, and art objects of Scandinavian design, manufacture, or inspiration. They can be seen in the home furnishings and gift departments of many of our leading department stores and in the many smaller shops specializing in Scandinavian merchandise. A few of the objects pictured are one-of-a-kind pieces that are privately owned and cannot be duplicated, but similar pieces can be found. For a list of stores, write House Beautiful, Readers Service Department, 572 Madison Ave., New York 22, New York, enclosing stamped self-addressed, business-size envelope. Ask for "Scandinavian store list."

but they never skaal the hostess, for the sake of her sobriety. A lady never originates a skaal except when she is the hostess, and to be really correct, a lady doesn't drink until a gentleman skaals her.

Skaaling is done with spirits and wine, never with water. During formal dinners a special skaal is usual as each wine is served. At meal's end a male guest rises, thanks the host and hostess on behalf of the company, and there's a final skaal.

Immediately after a meal, one should go to the hostess and thank her for the meal. "Tak for mat" is how the Danes put it. In fact, the sound of "tak" is always on the air for the Scandinavians seem to be constantly thanking each other for everything. The most curious and delightful thank-you is "Tak for sidst," with which you're greeted when you meet a friend. It means, "Thanks for the last time I saw you."

The tradition of hospitality is strong in these countries. Quite literally, nothing is too good for a guest. When you are invited to a home, it is customary to take flowers to your hostess. You will probably find your country's flag displayed. And do not imagine you are so hardboiled as not to be touched by this considerate gesture. Even in a brief visit you will be expected to eat something. It may be coffee and cake, tea, lemonade, wine or, in Denmark, the ubiquitous an delicious Cherry Heering which served as an incidental drink well as an after-dinner cordial.

In the matter of mealtime ma ners, there are a few sensible nic ties to be remembered. One doesn drink akvavit before one has eate something, usually a bit of herrin

A popular luncheon which eaten with knife and fork is plate of open sandwiches. (Th Danes, who are old masters at ma ing them beautiful, call th smorrebrod, Swedes say smorga Norwegians say smorbrod.) It polite to eat no more than an a sortment of five, a hefty quota.

Sweden's traditional smorga bord is not as generally availab as it once was, but the visit sooner or later faces one of the fabulous buffets. The uninitiate American, confused by profusio tends to go to the table on and heap his plate high wi something of everything. A fau pas! The proper technique is to e these dishes in five or more se arate courses, taking a fresh pla for each round. Start with a sa pling of fish, move on to cold cu then to salads, then to the h dishes, and finally to cheese a dessert. And remember that t well-bred smorgasbord-eater ways sees to it that the individu items on his plate don't overlap!

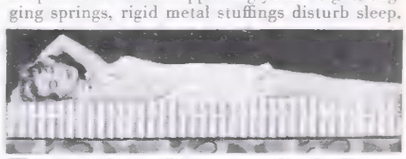
You sit on foam when you fly and you love it... now sleep on foam



Just make sure it's U.S. KOYLON the platinum label in foam mattresses

For the same reason you love to relax on that big foam chair and catnap on that foam sofa of yours, you'll also love sleeping on foam. Magical foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them the way conventional mattresses do. But you should know that not all foam makes equally good mattresses. Shun cheap foam like the plague. Better yet, specify U. S. Koylon.® finest of all foams. Uniquely constructed small core, double-core Koylon gives a totally new kind of gentle but firm straight-line support to every weary inch of you. It assures lasting firmness and much better ventilation. Non-allergenic Koylon is cleaner, cooler, fresher the year 'round. Of course it costs more to make foam mattresses this way, but it's worth it, as you'll soon discover in the world's most luxurious sleep. Prices for twin-size Koylon mattress and matching boxspring start at 129.50.

The old sleep: Ordinary mattresses resist the contours of your body, make it hard to relax, keep muscles tense supporting your weight. Sagging springs, rigid metal stuffings disturb sleep.

The new sleep: Double-core U. S. Koylon Foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them. Every inch of you gets firm straight-line support. And you relax all over in luxurious sleep.

IT'S WORTH MENTIONING

By JULIE POLSHEK

Plastic products from Sweden are new in our country; these are made by Gustavsberg, primarily famed for fine ceramics. In plastics as in ceramics, their designs have both distinctive form and high utility value. Oval juicer is held to 8-ounce pitcher by deep flange. Lemon yellow. $1.00. Snack set has 7¾″ x 4½″ tray with cup groove. "Suntan" beige: $1.50 for pair. From Bloomingdale's, New York 22, N.Y.

Knife sharpener built into this deluxe carving tray, Ver-Magic Contour-Flow, is a handy thing. Juice trough surrounding the carving area drains into well at one end. Slicing knife, when idle, fastens magnetically to side of footed tray. Finest wood is used; it is crafted with consummate skill; sizes 9″ x 11″, 12″ x 18″, 14″ x 24″; includes knife. $9, $19.50, $28. From Abercrombie & Fitch, New York and San Francisco.

Tablet arm like those used in school furniture gives Durham's juvenile chair extra usefulness outdoors or indoors. Unfolding chair automatically sets up 10″ x 12″ arm (hardwood-faced plywood) handy for TV refreshments, art activities, reading; inset well holds beverages, crayons or pencils. Tubular steel, bronze finish. Seat 14⅜″ x 14″ high. Padded, plastic upholstery; oyster, $9.50. From Taylor Gifts, Wayne, Pennsylvania.

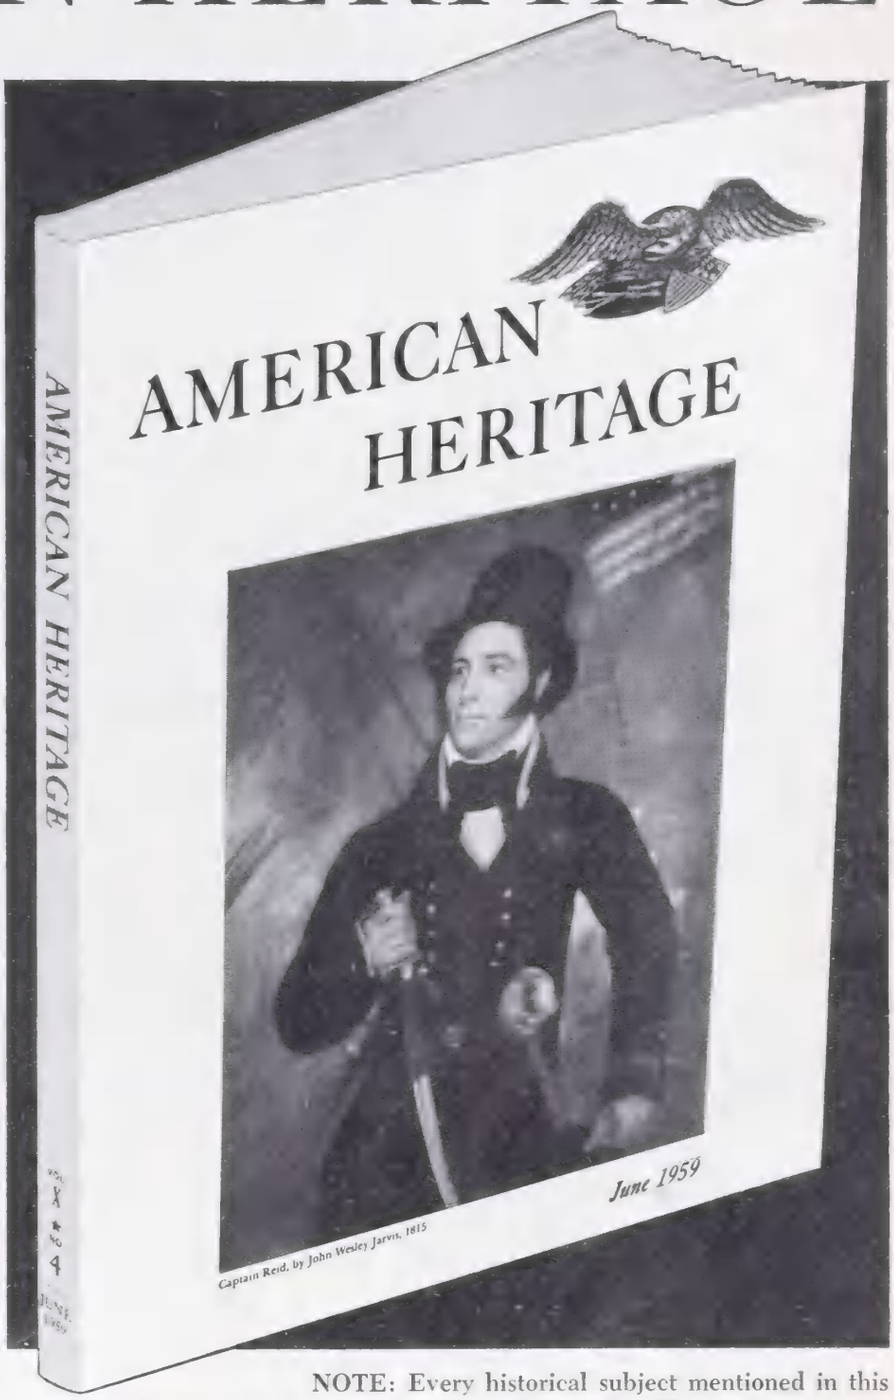
A new way to start a one-year subscription to AMERICAN HERITAGE

for only $1.95

Is your "sense of history" rusty? A knowledge of your own national background and character is a large part of your knowledge of yourself. And surely it is among the most enjoyable of cultural assets, lending perspective and balance to your view of today:

- Think our "ugly Americans" are tactless? How about an elderly U.S. Ambassador who exchanged indiscreet letters with a young, and married, French woman? (Benjamin Franklin did.)
- Our cities are going to pot? Lawless mobs terrorized New York City for a week, shooting, looting and lynching many hundreds of its citizens. (The Draft Riots of 1863.)
- Rock 'n' Roll sounds trashy? How about "Come my Arab lady, Where the palms are shady. Hasten to my side." (From a popular nickelodeon song slide of 1908.)



Nowadays more than 300,000 educated American families keep their history "up-to-date" with AMERICAN HERITAGE, the remarkable and much praised magazine that looks, and lasts, like a beautiful book. Every issue has hard book covers, no advertisements, over 100 illustrations (30 or more in color), a dozen lively articles by top-notch authors and historians.

Edited by Bruce Catton, Pulitzer Prize-winning historian, its articles are authoritative as well as lively. They range the bright and the dim corridors of America's past, from Raleigh and the precarious colony at Jamestown to the hopeless, inspiring 16-day defense of Wake Island.

Best of all, here's one magazine that actually increases in value with age: Every other month, six times a year, AMERICAN HERITAGE subscribers receive another addition to their growing shelf of first-rate history, bound, pictured and written for permanent use: re-reading, reference or school studies. The pictures alone make every copy a handsome "museum" of Americana: old maps, prints, paintings, costumes and weapons; famous people; scenes of cities, ships and battles...old cars, airplanes and artifacts.

AMERICAN HERITAGE is a big 11¼ by 8¾ inches, 112 or more pages, bound in handsome white-lacquered board, superbly printed on two kinds of fine paper. Each copy is comparable to limited-edition books which usually sell for $5 to $10 or more. But volume production lowers the price of each issue to $2.95, or $12.50 a year by subscription.

See for yourself now, with this new kind of introductory offer. First, mail the coupon here and you'll receive the current issue before you pay anything. Then, after you and your family look it over, send us just $1.95, followed by three convenient "deferred payments" of $3 a month. The total: $10.95—a big $6.75 below the cost of six copies bought singly. It's a good buy.

NOTE: Every historical subject mentioned in this advertisement is from one or another of the richly illustrated articles in the current AMERICAN HERITAGE. Mail the coupon right away and you'll be sure to start with this issue.

BEETHOVEN'S fourth piano concerto

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

■ The difference in the height of two mountains can best be judged by viewing them from a distance. The difference in the depth of two compositions can best be judged by viewing them close up. The greater works of Beethoven afford a double experience: pleasure on first acquaintance, perhaps even love at first sound, but true appreciation of their quality can be acquired only when acquaintance has grown into such intimacy that one knows the music by heart.

The more one compares Beethoven's later Piano Concertos, such as the Fourth, to the First, the more one marvels at the creative miracle that brought forth the difference in as short a period as four to five years. That is all the time which elapsed between the First and the Fourth. Never, of course, shall we know fully what happened to Beethoven's mind in this period. Only a few external facts exist. We can guess that his growing deafness, a tragedy for him as a man, may have been a profound blessing to his work for it drew his mind inward. Forced to renounce all ambition as a concert artist, he slanted his music less toward the virtuoso. We know, as well, that Beethoven underwent a severe mental crisis from which he emerged in an astonishing burst of creativity such as he was not again to repeat. At about that time, around 1805, Beethoven was engaged not only in composing the Fourth Piano Concerto but was also working on the score of Fidelio, the Fourth Symphony, Rasoumowsky quartets, and "Appassionata" Sonata.

Yet there is nothing patently "revolutionary" about this Fourth Piano Concerto. It is not new for the sake of novelty; it is both new and old, using the familiar to say the unfamiliar, which is perhaps the characteristic of a truly revolutionary work of art. It marks, as Rubinstein said, "a turn to a new world of expressiveness."

Holding fast to the essential concerto principle the Fourth represents a new kind of marriage between the soloist and the orchestra. These two become truly as one: the give and take between them becomes so interwoven that the seams are no longer visible. Now Beethoven thought of solo voices and ensemble as one, as he did in the Violin Concerto, which was to follow shortly but which even then must have been in his mind. There are innovations in the music which grow out of this new intimacy. Blocks, sections, episodes tend to disappear. Transitions become more gradual. The effect is a continuous design which results in sustained stimulation of our emotion. After listening we may not know precisely what has happened, but we do know that something important and satisfying has happened.

There is one novel touch in this music. At the beginning, instead of setting the stage for the soloist as was the custom in the classical concerto, the piano alone voices the theme. The chief actor speaks first —we can imagine the astonishment of the first audiences on hearing the piano without preparation. The orchestra then enters and restates the first theme. This orchestra is a small one. Trumpets or drums are not used in the first movement. The development of the first theme by the orchestra is short and modest, and soon guides us to a second theme. Both themes are of such beauty that they could make a believer out of an atheist.

Amaryllis blossoms enveloped by their strap leaves rise briskly erect in a classical style. The container is white porcelain.

A Japanese classical arrangement is based on three radical lines called Heaven, Man, and Earth which follow a set formal pattern. Heaven is the tallest line, Man the secondary line, and Earth the tertiary line.

A classical arrangement gives the impression of a single plant rising from the surface of the soil and gradually diverging into a trilinear form.

In this design, which is a modern adaptation of the ancient classic style, the radical lines are:

trouble with this concerto is further indicated by the fact that he not only wrote an explicit cadenza for the first movement but that he instructed the soloist to make no pause between the second and the third movements—again an innovation. Perhaps he feared that applause at this particular moment would disrupt the beatific mood so carefully created in the second movement.

We have said that Beethoven renounced his career as a performing artist. Yet we know that he performed the Fourth Concerto himself during one of the increasingly rare intervals when he could hear. The performance took place late in 1808. From a contemporary account of that program we are told that Beethoven played impulsively and "in the fastest possible tempi." Reading between the lines we may guess that Beethoven did not play too well. Immediately after the concert Beethoven asked a friend, Ries, to play the concerto for a subsequent occasion, giving him only five days in which to learn the piece. Beethoven w furious when Ries refused.

Perhaps it is possible to expe all the peace and love in one's s on work, leaving none for daily l and less for the relationship w friends.

So often, if asked to play wh the mood was not upon him. B thoven could be harsh in refu One documented instance of tem occurred during a summer stay the home of one of his patrons. T composer had been eagerly repeatedly asked to play by other guests. He refused and host jokingly threatened him w arrest. How to live outdoors without insects

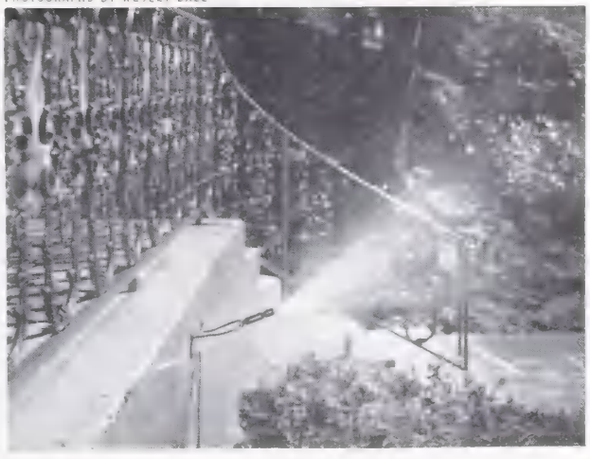
With a two-minute spray from its dozen nozzles, this built-in insect-control system can keep an outdoor area free of bugs for hours

■ The most beautiful outdoor living area in the world is of no use when the bugs are biting. A new insecticide system to clear the air for full-time outdoor living is shown here. A series of nozzles is installed around the area to be protected. They are connected by quarter-inch copper tubing to a pump that forces insecticide through them, making a jet of mist. This mist blankets the area and is effective for hours afterward. Under normal conditions, a two-minute spray twice a day will keep the area clear of bugs.



The control system comes in two sizes, the smaller one having four nozzles, pump, and enough tubing for the system to cover 3,000 square feet. The insecticide is stored in the container in which it is delivered. The cost is approximately $300. A larger system, having six nozzles, enough tubing to protect 5,000 square feet, and a stainless-steel drum to store the insecticide, costs about $500. The nozzles are spaced about 25 or 30 feet apart and spread the spray about 50 feet. Extra nozzles can be added at $25 each. Enough insecticide for a season costs about $60. Installation instructions come with the system. Flymaster, made by Feller-Jones Corp., New York City.

Large terrace and pool area (above) are protected by insecticide sprayed from built-in nozzles (nine are circled on photo). A close-up of one of the nozzles is shown below as it fills the air with a pleasant, lemony odor that is deadly to insects but harmless to people. The chemical is stored in drums and operated by a small pump, all of which is stored compactly and neatly under a metal cover (left). Quarter-inch copper tubing connects the basic unit to the nozzles. The semi-automatic timers on the wall shut off the spray two minutes after the button starts it. Use twice a day.

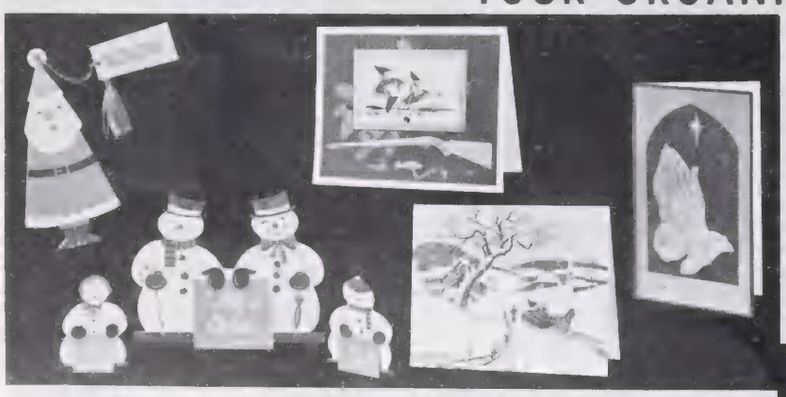
DECORATOR'S DIARY

From the pages of a decorator's notebook, musings on a special problem and how it was solved by a new home-furnishing fabric

Oh, for more clients like Eloise Moore, who approaches the "style" problem with an open mind. She doesn't bill herself as a traditionalist or a modernist or a "confirmed" anything. She simply evaluates the whole world and everything in it on its own merits. If she needs more storage space she's just as willing to look at a French Provincial armoire as at a set of modern glass shelves. Yet she's as selective as a Pulitzer Prize jury. Although her house is a catholic mixture of periods and cultures, there is no sense of clutter or indiscriminate collecting. Things centuries apart in origin look as if they were made for each other. And it's all due, I'm sure, to this lady's habit of wide-mindedness, and an educated eye that comes from constantly evaluating design.

Who, with Danish modern in the dining room, would listen to my rapturous description of a drapery and upholstery fabric patterned in a Court French motif of stylized roses? And, as if that weren't "period" enough, the fabric is a warp print, woven by a 15th-century Italian technique!

Eloise, however, caught on at once to what I was driving at. "If," she said, "the pattern is printed on the warp yarns before the cross-wise yarns are woven, then I'll bet the print becomes a shadowy, beautiful blur when the cloth is finished—and wouldn't that be lovely with my oil-finish teak table and my fruitwood armoire!"



How I love Eloise! There was little more to do than to hustle over to Jofa's showroom (where they have this handsome Baronio warp-print) and let her see for herself that her guess was absolutely right. The pattern of "Versailles," which she favored in mauve on pearl gray, is as dreamy-misty as twilight. And since the 54-inch fabric called "Beldora" is a sturdy weave of long-staple Egyptian cotton with dull rayon, we decided then and there to use it for dining-chair seats and the all-over upholstered host-and-hostess chairs as well as for the draperies.

And at the first dinner party after redecoration, with candles glowing in the old coach lanterns which flank the sideboard, and the Paul Revere silver glinting on the table, I couldn't help marveling how this lovely fabric seemed to have been expressly designed to go with everything in this room. I couldn't help thinking what decorating help these shadow-on-shadow Baronio warp prints can be, for they are done in a wide variety of patterns and colors distributed by several high-style fabric firms. At J. H. Thorp you find Baronio's famed Pompeian Cloth, a choice of solid fabrics in 71 different colors and shades. —M. G.

BIG SISSIES. The lion and the monkey have discovered that living in the jungle is not in the running with a soft berth in a pretty girl's college dorm; that being mauled by a tiny roughneck is preferable to a scrimmage with a panther. Lion is striped in red and white, monkey is black and white. Kapok stuffed, 15" high, $2.95 ea. Artisan Galleries, 2100 North Haskell, Dallas 4, Texas.

IMARI DISHES are small triumphs of perfection. Each dish is intricately decorated with heavy deposits of enamel in magnificent, bright Imari colors. Use them on your dressing table for pins, on the dining table for pats of butter, mints, or scatter them around the house as ash trays. 3½", in diameter; an assortment of four is $1.95. Order from Bard's, Dept. 1108, Evanston, Illinois.

THE VICTORIAN RAGE continues unabated in decorative circles, for good reasons. This lyre base-lamp table is as beautiful today as it was in a 19th-century drawing room. Solid Honduras mahogany in walnut, fruitwood, mahogany, or antique white and gold finish, with Arabescato marble top. 18 x 14 x 27½" h., 55 lbs., $39.50 f.o.b. Ala. Jones Bros., Box 246, Pine Level, N.C.

THE KABUKI DOLL is so extraordinarily beautiful that if you multiplied her price tag by five, she'd still be a remarkable buy. Authentically dressed in colorful costume according to the rigid standard of Japanese tradition, she has a hand-painted face and stands 14" high on an onyx-black lacquered base. $6.95. From Palley's, Dept. BP, 2263 E. Vernon, Los Angeles 58, Calif.

darling

you're much too nice to be a garbage collector

Garbage Collector — Too nice? Who said that?

In-Sink-Erator Disposer — I said it, darling—and I'm glad, glad! Your time is too precious, and so are you, to be spent in garbage "trudgery."

G. C. — But—you can't talk. You're only a garbage disposer.

I-S-E Disposer — I can talk your language, darling. And I can do other things no other disposer can do.

G. C. — What, for instance?

I-S-E Disposer — Well, I can shred all the food waste in your kitchen and wash it down the drain. But the big difference is in the way I do it. I keep myself running smoothly and never cause trouble. I last longer, too.

G. C. — You mean, you don't jam, like the others?

I-S-E Disposer — Not with my Automatic Reversing Action. That's a special feature—so exclusive, it's patented; so important, you simply must have it!

G. C. — M-m-m, no more garbage mess. That would be nice. Whom do I see . . . about you?

I-S-E Disposer — Just call your plumber. He will install me as a part of your sink. And before you can say "happy day" . . . you'll say goodbye to garbage—forever!

from coast to coast in America's finest residential areas you see more DAY-n-NIGHT Markers than any other kind of house marker

People who can afford any type of home identification choose low-cost DAY-n-NIGHT Markers. Good taste, simple design and honest craftsmanship have made DAY-n-NIGHT Markers America's favorites from coast to coast!

The perfect gift for birthdays—or any occasion—because it's personal! Gift card free on request.

ANY WORDING YOU WANT*

Your name or other wording appears on both sides of your DAY-n-NIGHT Marker in permanent, embossed reflector letters that shine brightly in headlights, softly in moonlight.

DAY-n-NIGHT Markers are rustproof; plates, frames, etc., are made of lifetime aluminum throughout. Baked enamel automobile finish; black background, white letters. The letters are permanent — raised in solid aluminum plates. Nameplates are 2½″ x 18″; number plates are 2½″ x 7″.

You can order any wording you want, up to 17 letters and numbers on nameplates, 6 on number plates. Same wording appears on both sides.

TO PEOPLE WHO WANT TO

WRITE FOR PROFIT

but can't get started

DO YOU have that constant urge to write for publication? Then here's YOUR big opportunity to get an expert analysis of your natural ability—without cost or obligation.

Now . . . A Chance to Test Yourself—Free

The Newspaper Institute of America offers a FREE Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover more men and women who can add to their income by writing stories, articles, publicity, advertising. Persons who pass are qualified to take the famous N.I.A. Copy Desk Training which teaches you to write by writing. Under this unique method, you receive constructive criticisms and kindly, but frank, suggestions from veteran editors. Many N.I.A. students actually acquire their "professional" touch while learning! The whole fascinating field of writing is explored—news, fiction, articles, etc. Each week you receive actual assignments, just like those given by metropolitan newspapers and magazines. Many earn $10, $25, $50 a week and more extra in their spare time. Material easily written in spare time.

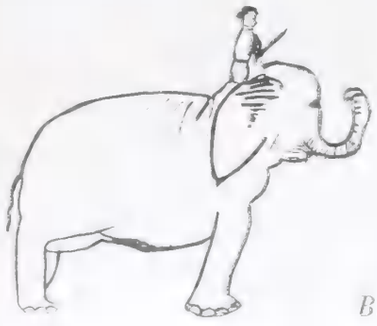
How to leave home and like it



PHOTOGRAPH BY LOTTE NOSSAMAN

Home after four months of travel, we all go Japanese for Sunday brunch. Our dressing gowns are yukatas. Graham, eleven, and David, eight, enjoy eating with chopsticks. Below are two of their drawings of high spots of the trip.

BUBBLE GUM IN BANGKOK

By ROSEMARY STREET LEWIS

Our friends said, "Impossible!

You can't take the children."

But how could we go to Japan—or to Hong Kong, Angkor Wat, Bali

or Australia without them?

● "Take the children with you to all those dangerous places?" Plainly, our friends thought we were demented. But travel, we felt, might help the youngsters grow up into wiser American citizens, with a friendly sympathy for the people of other nations, races and religions. While we poked exploratory fingers at the globe: Japan, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Angkor Wat, Bali, Australia—our conscience kept muttering, "Where will you get the money? How can you spare the time?" At this wavering stage, the boys' school gave vociferous approval. That's when we smashed our four piggy banks with an atlas.

What gave us the gumption to play hooky together for four months? When I was a member of the sandbox set, I had already started to travel with my family. Dad was a writer whose office was in his hat. We roved two hemispheres and I loved it. My husband, too, had been an enthusiastic junior traveler. He and I knew from experience how delighted children can get over far-flung scenes—particularly if parents catch them before they become engrossed with the gang at home, or start falling in love. Graham (our dynamo of eleven) and David (an eight-year-old dreamer with a funny-bone) were geographically elastic—and at half-fare rates. Asia seemed a lively choice, it was exotic and we had friends there. So we stole the time and scratched for the money.

We christened our journey Operation Nivnog (Nothing ventured, nothing gained). Preparations were formidable. (Please turn to page 99)

Recipe for summer serenity

The ingredients:
a house of quiet design that cannot be labeled modern or traditional:
a breath-taking view of broad horizons

The calm, relaxing beauty of summer green, cool water, and blue sky are reflected in a window set in simple white clapboard. Wood, glass, a view—none of these elements is extraordinary. Yet they have been brought together here to create a wonderful way of living. This house—quiet, unassuming, and thoughtfully designed—is shown in detail on the next eight pages.

Although traditional in appearance, this house is less tradition-bound than many so-called modern houses

The glazed gable of the bedroom wing lets in the full splendor of summer. The window shapes are modern, but so carefully proportioned that they fit into the unobtrusively traditional lines of house.

The spectacular view from this hilltop on the southern coast of Nova Scotia led the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence J. Morrow, to select it as the site for their house. The simple, understated architecture fits naturally into this setting. It has true style, derived not from rigid adherence to a ready-made formula, but from a direct approach to the problem at hand.

● At first glance this house may appear to be traditional, but actually it is much less so than many houses that are labeled modern and rigidly adhere to ready-made formulas.

If it appears traditional, it is because it was shaped by the enduring values of all good residential architecture. It is fitted to its particular site and to its climate. The unpretentious design comes directly from an unforced solution to the problem. It has the sure quality of being unaffectedly homelike.

For the architect, George W. W. Brewster, the chief problem in building on top of the hill was to secure full advantage of the panorama. The site had been chosen by the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence J. Morrow, because it was their favorite view-watching spot. From this hilltop near Lunenburg on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, you can see far out over the many islands in the bay. (Please turn the page)

The detached garden building in the foreground has, in addition to storage space, a greenhouse for flower growing and a screened porch with a fireplace for barbecues. The owners plan to build a swimming pool nearby for added summer fun.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

A black slate fireplace island with identical copper hoods on each side separates the living and dining areas and opens through to both. This long room is like a colonnaded porch, closed to the entrance court but open to the panorama of the bay. The very heavy mullions, in addition to framing the view, act as vertical elements to oppose and stabilize the extreme horizontality of the landscape. They also give a greater feeling of security and shelter to the occupants who might otherwise feel unprotected living in a location so open to the elements.

To see how important architecture is to landscape beauty, cover the left half of the above picture and view it without any foreground "framing" element. Compare this with the various interior views from the house shown on this page and see how the structure of the openings, the planes of the ceiling and floor (even the furniture) serve to focus your attention upon the surrounding landscape, making you more aware of it and adding significance to it.

Architecture can be a frame to give added depth and meaning to the beauty of the landscape

Before starting the house, Brewster visited the site and studied the region. But except for the simple fishermen's shacks built of wood with clapboard walls and shingle roofs, no local architecture suggested a point of departure or a direction to follow in the design. The most important consideration was to take advantage of the truly magnificent view without letting it overpower or dominate the interior of the house.

If you study the various photographs of the interior shown on these pages, you can see how well the problem was solved. The Morrows, instead of being exposed to the view, are presented with it in a delightful series of framed vistas.

No attempt was made to have all of the view visible from any one particular room, although each of the rooms has its share. For better appreciation it is savored in smaller portions instead of being swallowed whole in one gulp.

The architecture, in addition, stresses strong verticals, using the heavy mullions of the windows visually to stabilize the insistent horizontal direction of the landscape. This sense of visual stability is most important, since it gives a feeling of security and protection all good architecture should have. (Please turn the page)

Located off the entrance hall, the pleasant study is used both as an office and as an intimate sitting room. Through its large floor-to-ceiling windows you can look out toward the seacoast town of Lunenburg. The handsome diagonal walnut paneling is mitered over the slate fireplace. Walnut is also used for the double doors that close off the bar equipment.

Glazed doors and large windows open two sides of the master bedroom to the magnificent view. Doors open to area planned for a future swimming pool. Notice how the ventilating sashes are placed low on the windows so that they don't obstruct vision. They are hinged at the bottom to tilt in and deflect the air, thereby reducing drafts and keeping out rain.

A corner of the entrance courtyard is paved with flagstones in an irregular shape that contrasts effectively with the precise architecture of the house. See how the front door is carefully positioned in the almost severe windowless wall.

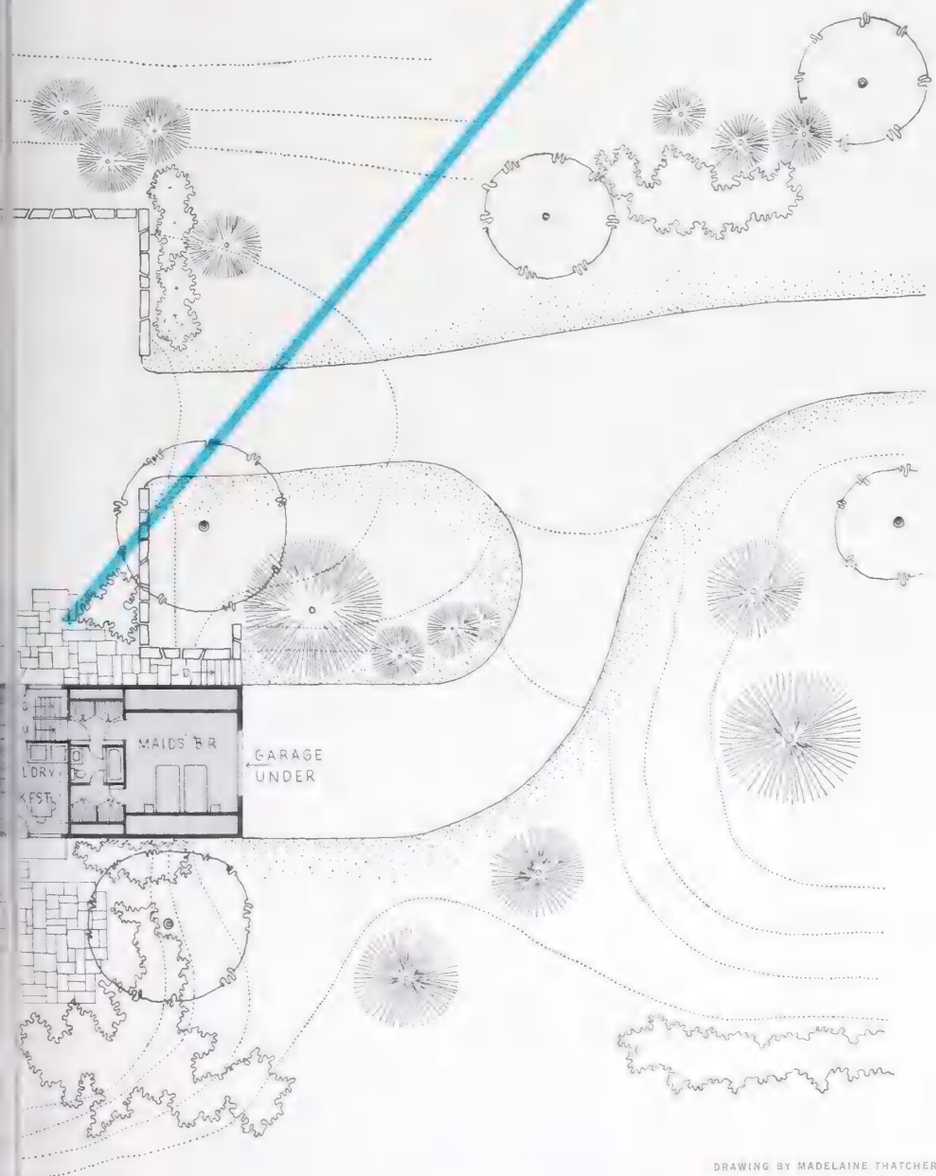
The various units of house are grouped about the auto entrance court, amply-sized for parking of guest cars. Except for entrances, rooms do not open onto the court. All face outward toward panorama of surrounding hills and bay.

SECOND FLOOR



Resembling the traditional house-plus-later-additions, this is a simple but studied group of elements: service unit (left), living and dining (center), bedrooms and study (right).

The kitchen wing and the convenient service entrance as seen from the entrance court. See how kitchen ventilating unit on roof becomes a design feature—not an added after-thought.

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Though designed with precision, the house looks casual and unpretentious

You aren't conscious of style (in the sense of outworn labels like modern and traditional) when you look at this house. Quiet, restful, and unassuming, the plan is a reflection of the requirements and interests of the owners. Since the more favored views are to the south and to the east, the three main elements are grouped by the architect with studied casualness to form the south and east sides of the entrance court. Each element serves a different function: bedrooms and study, living-dining, service.

Except for the entrances, the house is closed and windowless on the courtyard side. This shuts out a view of parked cars and also shields the house from northwestern winds in winter. The south and east sides of the house are opened outward to views of the bay. (Please turn the page)

The guest room, tucked under the roof with a sense of snug security, has a view over the surrounding hills, handsomely framed by the glazed gable. The room is large enough to serve as a dorm for visiting grandchildren. The draperies are furled in a nautical manner.

Architect-designed, and made by local craftsmen, the stairs that lead to guest room have walnut treads supported on an oak beam. Rail, light, and stair become a sculptural feature.

Straightforward design makes this a house that is pleasant to live in and very easy to maintain

The simplicity and straight-forwardness of its design, the choice of materials, and the manner in which they are used, makes this a house that is pleasant to live in and one that is also easily maintained.

It contains the best in mechanical equipment, but one is never aware of it. Even the kitchen manages to remain more domestic than mechanical in character. The mechanics of the house are played down in favor of its qualities as an environment in which to live. It has its own pump and water system because of its isolated position. In the garden house is a stand-by power plant ready for use in emergencies such as breaks in the local distribution system or power failures.

In the same manner that its mechanics are understated, this house has an element of reticence about its design which is somewhat deceptive. It looks so simple and easy that one may overlook the skill and thought which have gone into it.

For details, please turn to page 116

The spacious kitchen has the same refreshing simplicity as the whole house. The tall, gable-end window (right) fills the room with light and provides a view of the entrance area. In opposite gable (not shown) are a vent grille and a fan to exhaust air from the kitchen. A high, ventilated space like this one will make any kitchen much more pleasant during the summer. The stairs (above) lead up to the maid's room, down to the garage. The service door to court is to the left of the stairs.

Mike's Seventh Summer

You've probably forgotten the secret of inventing things by mistake. If you listen very carefully to seven-year-old Mike, you may be able to remember

By RUTH STEVENSON SIDELL

● There is a week in Wisconsin when the spring green comes. It is embroidery stitched in a thousand shades of green, from the pink-green of the maple buds to the yellow-green of the willows and the special emerald-green carpeting the pastures.

With this symphony in green came the first intimation of the particular piquancy and pungency that were to mark Mike's seventh summer.

We were reading a book—the Arabian Nights, as a matter of fact—on the shore of Paint Creek one warm May noon, stopping now and then to watch the turtles taking their first spring sunbaths. As he listened, Mike groped silently for his shoe laces, worked them round and round in his fingers, finally wiggled both feet free of shoes and socks. There was a trance-like silence for a moment at the end of the story, while he fought his way back to reality. Then he looked at his feet, raised his deep brown eyes to mine, and offered, unasked, an explanation.

"Sometimes," he said gravely, "if you're reading a story and you just use your bare feet, it feels more like you're them."

Soon the myriad greens of spring ran together like water paint into the single green of summer. The boats came out on the lake like animals coming out of hibernation into the white-hot sunshine.

Sometimes, as I lay on the end of the dock looking down at the waterbugs in their continual aimless motion, I would think how much they were like seven-year-old boys.

After a lazy lunch on the dock, we would read all the good, old favorite books. Every picnic on the Big Island brought to life another chapter of Robinson Crusoe; and there were always mysterious footprints to follow through the sand. Or else there would be some Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea observations to be made through the sparkling, amber-tinted water just a little off shore.

The literary life had lively competition, though, from the scientific life. One breezy morning after a long neighborly session with the doctor next door, Mike said, "I'm so glad I know a man with a skull. Now if I just had a skeleton. And if I could only find some way to see inside a person and find out what it really is like inside people, anyway." The study of bones seemed to have a special fascination for Mike, and the pursuit of a skeleton became his most impassioned activity. He finally found a way to provide himself with one, and a peculiarly pungent and pervading odor led me to it—a very dead fish, laid out in state on the garage roof.

"It's there to dry in the sun," he explained looking at me intently. "So I'll have a skeleton. I do need a skeleton so badly."

Another treasure I found some weeks after it had been lovingly put away. It was a collection of woodpecker's bones. And the climax came in July when he found a dinosaur skull in the woods. It had a peculiar resemblance to the skull of a steer and by coincidence it turned up very near the spot where a neighboring farmer had once buried the refuse after a butchering.

"But after all," Mike insisted, "it might perhaps be a dinosaur skull," and he couldn't be shaken.

The interest in science often led him to classify things carefully and minutely. Once I reprimanded him for leaving a pair of shoes outside, ending with the admonition that he should begin to take better care of his clothes.

"Clothes are cloth," he told me firmly. "Shoes are a different principle."

But just as literature had to give way to science, science in turn sometimes had to give way to less concrete matters. In cleaning out a closet, I found and threw away a man's hatbox which happened to be decorated with a scene showing Fifth Avenue shops. The box turned up shortly in a protected corner beside Mike's bed. I was instructed (as I have been instructed about so many things) not to tamper with it.

"That's my New York," he explained.

All summer it remained his New York—not a plaything, not a symbol, but a living, breathing city, teeming with people, crammed with all the things he's ever heard about Manhattan, and so much alive that he carefully removed the lid for five minutes every morning and evening, "to let in some fresh air." Why does a barn make a wonderful house

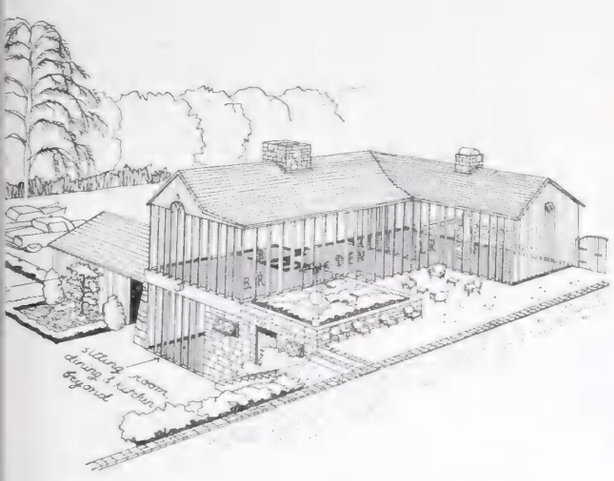
By CURTIS BESING



Doors are painted a faded barn red outside. They provide a center of interest and a contrast to the weathered gray siding of the wall into which old, small-paned windows have been set. The doors lead to living room, once the barn loft (see page 61).

Magnificent scale, vast interior spaces, dramatic use of wood and stone— all these are assets to take advantage of, as this barn remodeling proves

● When decorators Luke Kelly and John W. Scov were faced with the problem of converting this Pou Ridge, N. Y., barn into a dwelling, they took stock its virtues: character, sturdy construction, genero space (which is now enjoyed to great advantage), a the rich texture and color of its weathered siding a stone foundation walls.

Unlike so many others who have converted an barn into a "fit place to live," they made no atte to disguise or camouflage the barn-like quality the building. Instead, they have enthusiastically e phasized it and have carefully (Please turn the pag

On the southeast side of the original L-shaped structure a gallery with a semi-flat roof was added. Enclosed by a wall of plate glass with teak uprights, it opens to the outdoor sitting area on the upper level seen in sketch. Leaded windows in stone walls are from an old house.

Having the common features of most barns, this one was built into a sloping site for ease of access to both levels: the upper, and lighter, wooden portion for the storage of feed—now the living and sleeping rooms; and the lower portion, built of stone, where the animals were kept—now used for the entrance, lower living level, kitchen and services. Old materials were used in the garage and breezeway addition (at left in photos) to maintain character.

The large and high-ceilinged loft was changed into a great living room worthy of a manor. Walls and ceiling were lined with composition board. Flamboyant edge of metal hood over fireplace hearth is cast aluminum.

preserved the patina of time. Its simple form and flavor was kept by making all changes and additions in a style that harmonizes with the original construction, and by using old and weathered materials wherever it was possible.

The barn loft on the upper level, now used for the living room and the bedrooms, is essentially the same big space that it always was. It has been made livable by finishing the interior, adding doors and windows, and opening the walls next to the terrace.

The lower level, where you usually enter, has also been changed very little. The rough stone walls were left exposed and the space has been kept intact, except for its general separation, by a four-sided stone fireplace, into sitting and dining-cooking areas.

In contrast to the barn-like character of the building itself, the interior has been furnished with a comfortable luxury that the spare and weather-beaten exterior has not prepared you to expect. And although the furnishings do not seem (Please turn the page)

Living room is made even larger in effect by a plate glass wall, with teak supports separating it and the gallery from the outside terrace. A similar glass wall separates guest room (above right) from gallery and living room. In a high-ceilinged space like this, bold overscaled pieces of furniture can be used to good advantage.

To harmonize with the aged wood of exterior, the bedroom walls are finished with siding from an old tobacco barn. The floor is reused pine siding, sanded and stained. Gray draperies complement the mellowed wood.

This view from gallery, with a glimpse of outside terrace, shows the details of glass wall. Notice that panels at head of stair to lower level can be opened for ventilation and access to the terrace, which has paving of marble chips.

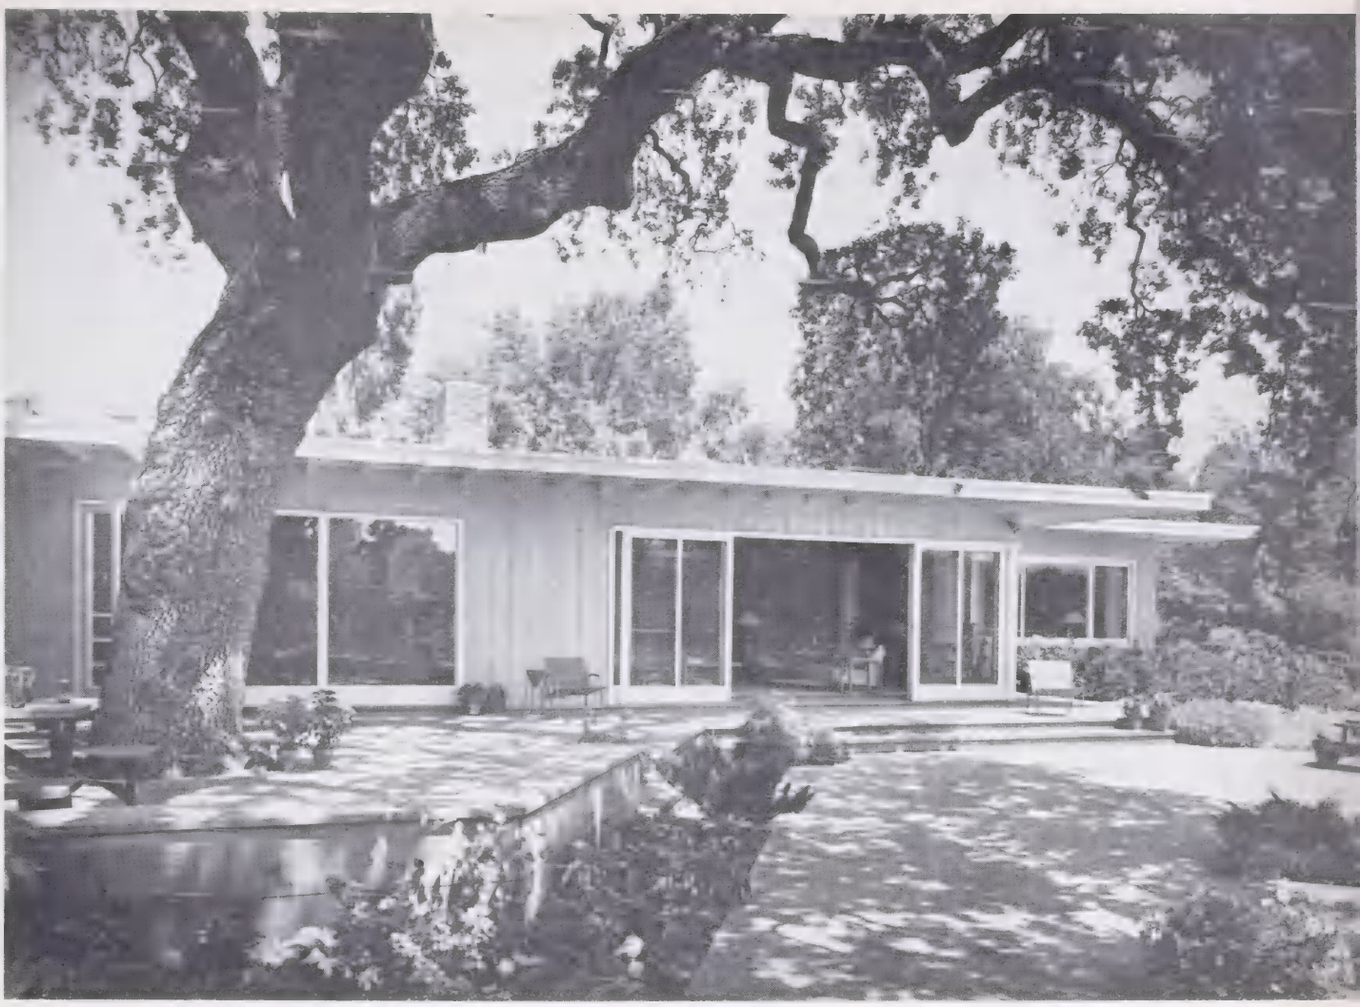
out of place (they were carefully selected for textures, colors, and forms in harmony with the old barn), they do give an entirely un-barnlike atmosphere to the interior. Their selection was guided by an entirely different concept from that generally associated with living in a barn.

The secret of success in this venture is the ability to see with a fresh eye. This did not mean discarding the old in favor of the new, simply for its own sake, but rather developing a contemporary feeling in keeping with the original simplicity.

Unlike the great, spacious living room upstairs, the sitting room on the lower level, is low-ceilinged and intimate. Its walls are the original rough stone foundations of the barn. The furnishings add a note of luxury that contrasts with the weathered structure.

A substantial stone fireplace, open on four sides and separating this portion of lower level into sitting and dining areas (but allowing view of south windows) is the focal point in this room. Native stone was used for this structure so that it would be compatible with the simple stonework of the original barn.



The kitchen, at the opposite end of the lower level, is separated from the dining area by the counter faced with old siding. Its built-in sink, cooking-top, griddle, and ovens are stainless steel.

Treetops grow right through this deck, which was built to take advantage of their shade and the marvelous view. On a slope such as this, a paved terrace would be impractical and only a deck could be constructed without sacrificing the tree by disturbing its roots. The spaces between the boards let water through for the tree and at the same time help dry the surface so that it can be used right after a downpour. Home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fahrney; Thomas Church, landscape architect.

When the sliding doors are opened, this deck becomes as much a part of daily living as any room in the house. It gives the effect of tieing the house to the tree and land. Home of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Stern, Thomas Church, landscape architect.

See what a deck can do

- It gives you outdoor living space on a slope the easiest and least expensive way.
- It lets you use tree shade without endangering the trees.
- It takes almost no work to maintain.

• There is something exciting about sitting out on a deck, an exhilaration that seems to grow the higher you are from the ground. Yet in spite of its almost romantic connotations, the deck is becoming more and more important to us for good practical reasons. For one thing, we are building more on uneven or hilly sites, where a deck is the only way to get useful outdoor space. Even on gently sloping land, a deck is usually less expensive than a paved area which requires retaining walls and the moving of earth. Also, a layer of boards makes a finished floor that is easy to maintain.

Then, too, you can build around trees without risking loss by disturbing their roots. Since the runoff pattern is not disturbed, soil is not washed away and there is little replanting to do. Where the deck stops, your investment in landscaping can stop too. The existing growth below and beyond it can usually be let alone. A terrace calls for additional landscaping.

As for materials: redwood is most often used for outdoor construction because of its resistance to decay and the beautiful way it weathers. Cedar, a softer wood, also resists decay and weathers well. Fir, a very resilient wood, is not so resistant, but can be pressure-treated with preservative. The beauty of wood for a deck: it's a natural material that blends with both the garden and the house. COMPARATIVE COSTS: A DECK AGAINST A TERRACE

Area (520 sq. ft.) and the slope in each of these examples is exactly the same.

Deck (piers, posts, floor, rail): about $2,100.

Terrace (wall, fill, drain, paving): about $3,500.

■ Why does the deck shown in the drawings above cost $1,400 less than a paved terrace of the same size and on the same slope? (Slope is 6 feet in 20.) The major factor is the cost of the retaining wall, estimated at $2,800, more than the entire cost of the deck. As the site becomes steeper, the cost of the retaining wall and fill to make a terrace increases enormously. But to build a deck, the only extra cost (relatively small) is for higher and stronger underpinnings. There is almost no hillside too steep for a deck. By contrast, if the slope were very slight, a paved terrace might cost less than a deck. In that case the cost of the floor is crucial, and concrete costs less than wood.

These estimates (labor included) are for California. The costs of building a deck or terrace in other parts of the country may be higher or lower, but the relation of one cost to the other will be much the same.

A new hobby for the creative gourmet

Make-them-yourself infusions of herbs, peels, or spices in vodka

By POPPY CANNON

● Here is an idea that is blazing new to America, if not the world. The infusion in vodka of herbs (fresh or dried), spices, or fruit peels to use in drinks and as flavorings. Delightful to see, whiff, and taste, they are conversation pieces for your kitchen, bar, or dining room.

In Russia and Poland blades of buffalo grass are traditionally placed in vodka to impart a delicate sweet-as-hay perfume and a tint like sunlight captured under glass. Pepper was often added to the spirits, served with caviar. In the great households of Imperial days each family had its specially flavored vodinka, often gold or silver flecked. (Vodka means "little water" in Russian; vodinka is an even more affectionate diminutive.)

For some time HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's editors have been experimenting. A few months ago we were able to enlist the poetic imagination and the technical skill of one of the country's most eminent oenologists, Dr. Frank Gallizio, consulting chemist to Heublein, makers of Smirnoff vodka.

In his laboratories and in our own kitchens, more than 50 different ingredients were sampled. We have chosen 21 of the best—the most usable, the loveliest in color and pattern, the most appealing in flavor and aroma. Not all ingredients are equally successful. One must be careful not to use too much of anything, just enough to impart a subtle bouquet and a delicate shade. The leaves, branches, peels, and stems are left in the bottle to add to its dramatic appearance.

Among those with the greatest interest are vodkas flavored with fresh peel of citrus (Please turn to page 111)

Now you can almost paint with tiles

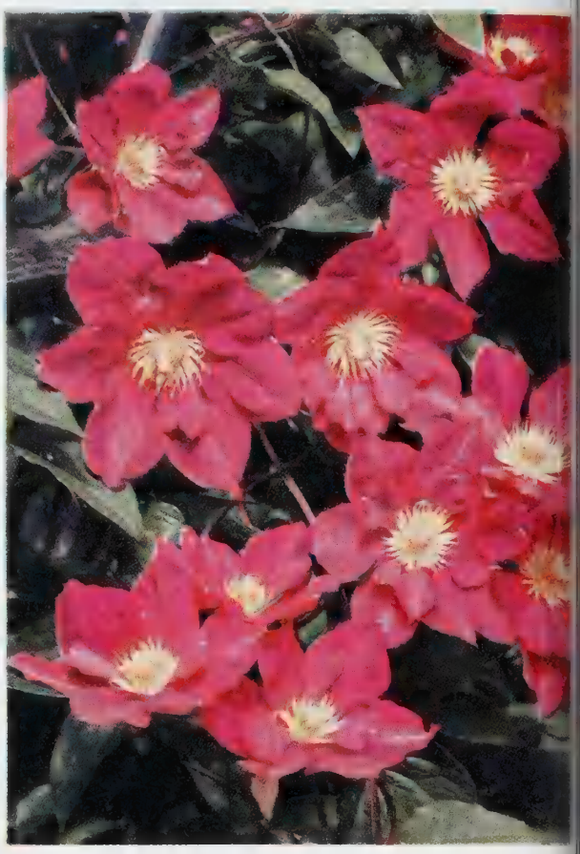
IS VAN NES

On a terrace, a rich tile tapestry designed by Eugene Masselink of the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation uses flowering vines as a motif, sweeps down onto floor. Glazed and unglazed tiles are effectively contrasted.



The blue palette is one of nine groups of compatible colors. You can put together any or all of the colors in a group without monotony since the colors are not matched, although related, and have subtle differences in texture and finish. Some are smooth and highly glazed, while others have egg-shell glazes, are unglazed, or have interesting mottled surfaces. There are also other sizes and shapes besides the inch-square tile that has been used in the mural, and most can be successfully combined.

● This dramatic architectural decoration for the end of a long terrace owes much of its richness and subtlety to a new palette of tiles that was used by the designer, Eugene Masselink, almost the way a painter uses pigment. He was able to choose from nine color groups, each containing many finishes and textures. Called Harmonitone by the Mosaic Tile Company, the new palette makes it possible to achieve effects with tile that were never possible before. (Please turn to page 116)

Don't underestimate Clematis

If you think of them as summer flowers and hard to grow, you're wrong. Clematis bloom from May to October and couldn't be easier when you give them what they need

By DOROTHY H. JENKINS

● In early August when there's not much in bloom and you see the vibrant color of a big clematis in full display, it is easy to understand their reputation as a summer flower. But to think of them only as one-season plants is to sell them short and deny yourself some delightful flowering vines in spring and fall. They bloom, according to variety, from May until October and come in a surprising range of colors. (On page 111 we list some of the best for each season.)

Some of them are so large and colorful, with the fragile beauty of hothouse blooms, that they look hard to grow. Nothing could be further from the truth. They have the persistence of the buttercup (to which they are related), are tough and dependable, and, with a winter mulch, will thrive in our coldest gardens.

Flowers, of course, are not all that clematis has to offer. The attractive foliage retains its fresh green color through the hottest part of summer.

The vines can be planted in fall or spring. Fall planting is successful even in New England where it often is not for other plants. And fall planting has the advantage of promising some bloom the following summer whereas spring planting means waiting a full year in most parts of the country.

Success with clematis starts before planting and continues with periodic but light care every year. A formula was written out for me years ago by someone who seemed to have a magic touch for growing them. There was a postscript that (Please turn to page 110)

The ideal situation for clematis is a place where it can stretch upward from a shaded root run. The performance of this C. henryi proves the point.

How to be a Superb Grandparent

Grandparents can round out a child's world in a way that no other person or influence can. The children, in turn, can give a grandparent's life a new purpose. Here is a wonderful example

● Being a grandparent is a career in itself, with limitless importance to young and old alike. This was a discovery made by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Gates when they built a retirement home in Pacific Palisades, Calif., the same community in which their son and daughter live. They have four grandchildren: Cory and Barry Crandall, children of daughter Marilyn (Mrs. George Crandall); and Belinda and Billy Gates, children of Russell, Jr.

In the years since their retirement, the elder Gateses have come to realize they are capable of adding much that is wise and wonderful to the growth of their grandchildren. The tempo of their lives has slowed so that they are content to enjoy the leisurely re-doing, re-learning, and re-living of life. In this they impart a sense of security to the children and open a world of pleasure and satisfaction for themselves.

Grandchildren were uppermost in the minds of the Gateses in planning their new home. To the small, easily-maintained house for themselves, they added a separate and complete guest house to be used by any visiting family member. Then they set about equipping their home with built-in fun and games (Please turn the page)

Grandfather and Grandmother Gates smile up at the boys in the stupendous tree house, one of the many attractions that draw continuously the four grandchildren to their home. Cory Crandall uses the deck as a launching-site for one of his model planes while his brother Barry reads inside. The only granddaughter, Bindy Gates, watches from the catwalk as her young brother Billy gets a big push on the swing.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Out of their wide experience and with unending patience, grandparents can make learning a fascinating affair

Grandpa Gates doesn't believe in pushing or prodding. But when a grandchild wants a sling shot or a boomerang or his own bird house, he is led gently to the Gates work bench. There he is shown the proper tools to use and the safe way to use them. Above, Grandpa Gates starts a boat that Billy will sand and paint to finish.

Making enamelware jewelry is one of the hobbies Mrs. Gates took up, after her husband's retirement. Now she has a chance to share it with her grandchildren. Here she and Lory are setting up the kiln for firing.

Grandma Beebe, as they call her, always seems to have time to help the children when they want to cook or bake. She makes it so much fun that by now the boys devise their own improvements on basic cookie recipes.

that would draw the grandchildren (and their parents). Utilizing the labor and liberal advice of the entire family, they installed a tree house, coasting paths, a swimming pool, snack shelves, a sizable barbecue, and dozens of lesser lures. Their objective: to make any visit a treat rather than a duty.

"Like all grandparents," says Mr. Gates, "Mrs. Gates and I can't ever see enough of the children. But we want their visits to be at their insistence, not ours. We don't want to intrude on their family life at home. The children know we're here most of the time, and they know they're always welcome to come and bring their friends."

During these visits (Please turn the page)

Music and the other arts are a part of the everyday atmosphere of the Gates home. Both the parents and grandparents prefer children to perform themselves than to watch someone else. This trio, with Grandpa Gates leading Barry and Cory, is likely to break out at any time.

A love of machines and the need for a new sail on his toy boat started Barry Crandall using his grandmother's sewing machine. It took a lot of help at first, but now, at eleven, he is quite proficient with it. Teaching the children this kind of skill often takes more time and patience than a busy mother wants to devote to it.

Brick-laying is one job the whole family seems to enjoy. To date, the Gateses, large and small, have laid some 44,000 bricks into paths and patios around the house. But if the children don't feel like helping, they get paints or books from their own shelves in Mr. Gates's study.

To be an informed collector is an ambition Mr. Gates is instilling in his grandchildren. But he recognizes that they need much more guidance and encouragement than many parents realize. He won't start them on their own collections until they show strong interest.

The swimming pool was planned primarily for the children, but the adults enjoy it too. Without ever having to leave home, the Gateses have been part of the grandchildren's growing up.

Grandparents have great tolerance for mess and will put up with practically any inconvenience so long as they feel the grandchildren are learning something or just having fun.

The grandchildren clamor to visit the Gates home with its many attractions designed just for fun the Gateses, in common with most grandparents, seem to have perpetual patience for listening to long, rambling, not-too-clear childish conversations. Where parents might become snappish or impatient, the grandparents seemingly relish playing the monotonous juvenile games or instructing the children in cooking, sewing, reading, digging or building.

"When I'm weeding in the garden or sitting on the terrace, the children plop down beside me," Mrs. Gates explains. "I find their conversations to be more than idle chatter. If a butterfly drifts by, the boys tell me whether it's a monarch or a viceroy. When we come across an arrowhead—and we (Please turn to page 102)

The firewood detail is just one of the many chores that Billy likes to handle with his Gramp. By the end of one of his visits, the Gates woodbox is bulging.

Safe coasting paths edge terraced lawns on two levels. When Barry and Cory received this gas-engined hot-rod last Christmas, all the paths had to be widened to accommodate it. The homemade trailer takes trash cans to the street for weekly collection.

The whole family often gathers at the Gates home because of its wonderful barbecue and picnic area. Cory Crandall is mixing a salad; Russ Gates, Jr., is serving his daughter, Bindy; Barry Crandall helps his grandmother and young Billy Gates to some punch; Grandpa Gates has his guitar out. Barbara Gates cuts gingerbread as the Gateses' daughter, Marilyn, helps her husband, George Crandall, with the barbecue.

The Big News in Slipcovers

- A remarkable new "touch-closing" nylon tape now gives slipcovers smooth, metal-less closures and helps anchor them in place so they won't slip or sag.
- New drip-dry, stain- and crease-resistant fabrics keep them looking well groomed longer and make them easy to clean.

Would you believe that a slipcover could look so much like upholstery? This cover is held by Velcro tape sewed to bottom edge. It grips tape stapled to chair frame. Bancare-finished cotton by Everfast.

● At long last, here they are—trim, non-slipping, non-sagging slipcovers that fit with the snugness of upholstery yet are easy to manage and easy to clean.

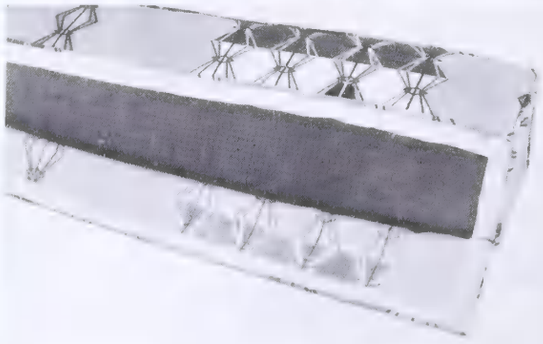
The materials that make this possible are drip-dry, soil- and wrinkle-resistant cotton fabrics used in conjunction with an astonishing new fastening device called Velcro. This fastener consists solely of two flat and flexible nylon tapes which adhere to each other when pressed together—a performance hard to believe until you see it with your own eyes. (We show details on page 83.) Since the tape is buttonless, metal-less, snagless, and can easily be sewed on each side of a slipcover opening, closures are trim and flat. Tape never puckers, goes smoothly over curves and can be cut or mitered at corners. You can also simplify upkeep by making the skirt of a slipcover detachable, applied to the slipcover proper by Velcro. When the skirt is soiled by heel marks, peel it off and wash it. Hang it to drip-dry with the pleats hanging down, then finger-press the skirt back on the cover. No ironing is necessary, for the fabric irons itself.

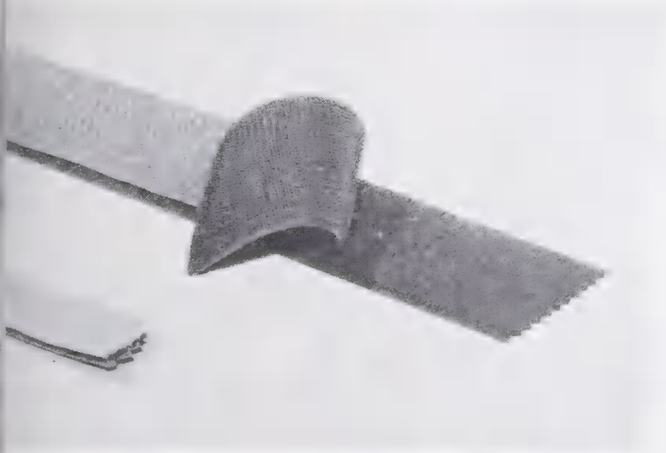
On page 83 see how the gripping power of Velcro makes sure slipcovers won't skid out of shape. Small strips of tape in strategic places, one hand-sewed to the upholstery, the other stitched to the underseam of the slipcover, create a slipless anchorage.

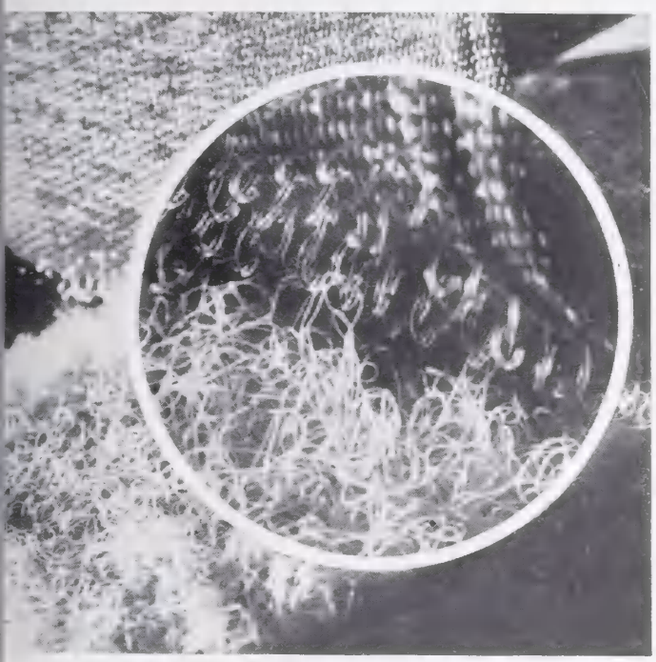
Sounds wonderful, doesn't it? But bear in mind that perfect cutting and fitting of a slipcover are of course as important as ever. So is the choice of fabric, which, like these many-virtued drip-dries, must have firmness, tensile strength, and ability to retain its freshness.

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOWARD GRAFF

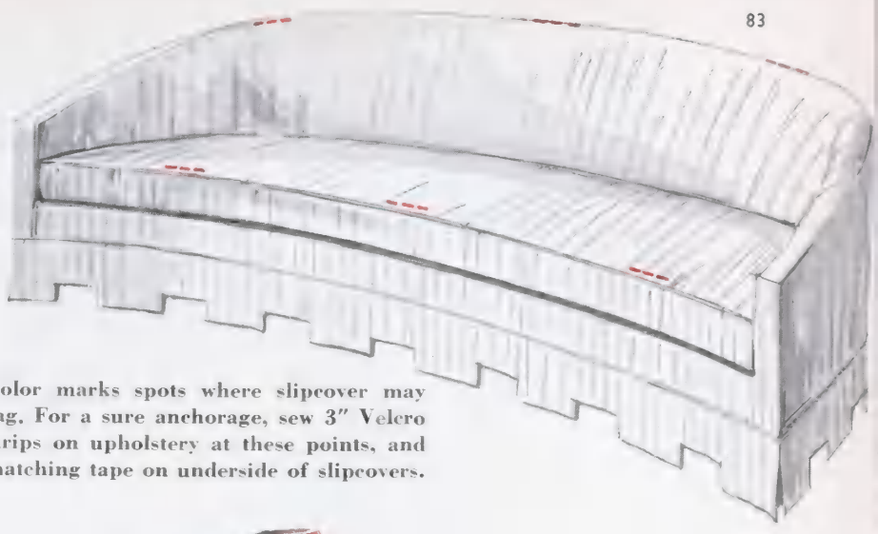
A new fabric, a new fastener, and some new ideas combine successfully in this neatly fitted slipcover. The sticks-to-itself Velcro tape fastener (the edging strip below and right) holds the skirt on, lets it come off easily to be washed, drip-dried. Wide openings of back and cushion make putting-on simple but precise. For non-slip fitting, points that may sag are anchored to chair with tape. (Turn page for details on how this is done.) Fabric, "Pam-Pam" by Everfast, of Everglaze "Bancare" cotton. Table from Kean Associates; basket from Bonniers.







This day bed owes its immaculate appearance to a firm, water-repellent fabric (that drips dry) and to some clever maneuvers with touch-closing tape. The pleated skirt is held by tape hand-sewn to the cover of the box spring. Tape fastens the contour corners of the mattress cover. The bolster cover opens on three sides for easy handling. Places where sagging could spoil the fit are held by tabs of tape on the inside of the cover. "All Set" pre-shrunk fabric by Riverdale. Day bed by Mittman. Table by Colby Associates.

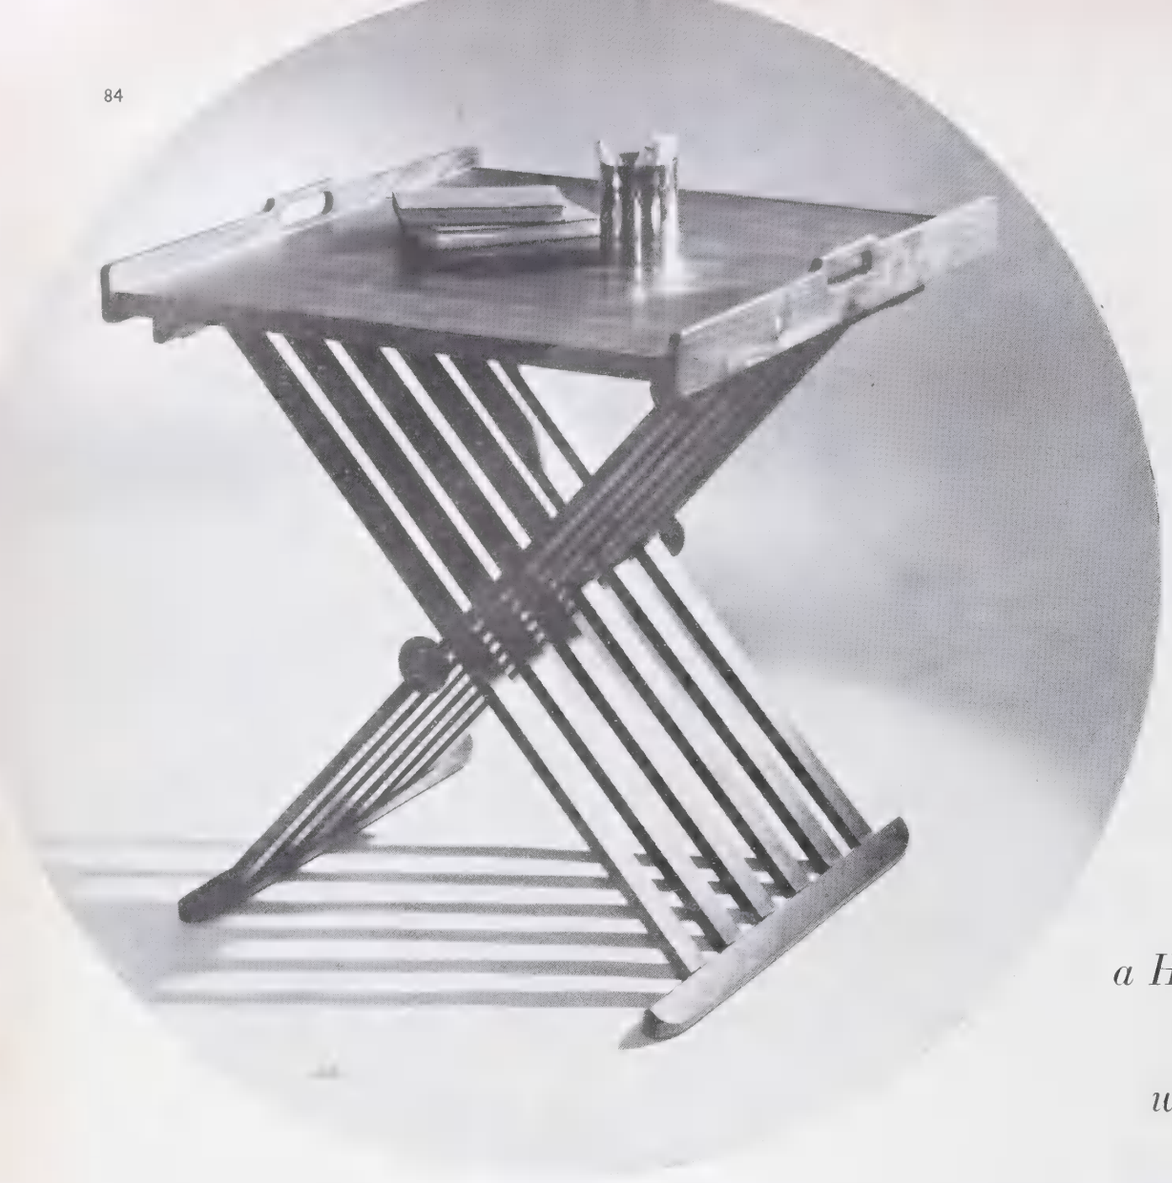


Velcro fasteners stick together and peel apart almost like adhesive tape, yet they are pure nylon fabric. Soft, supple, easy to sew, they are naturals for slipcover closures, but other uses are endless.

What is this thing called Velcro?

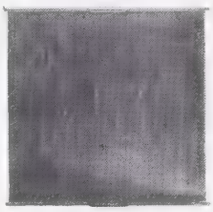
George de Mestral, the inventor of this hard-to-believe, touch-and-close fastening device, was inspired by the tenacity of the burdock burr. It's a simple system of two strips of woven Dupont nylon tape, one rather rough-surfaced with a myriad of minute hooks of stiff nylon yarn, the other a velvet-like texture into which the hooks mesh. (See the tapes magnified above.) These soft, flexible tapes solve any problem involving fabric closure or anchorage, can be washed or dry-cleaned without losing their effectiveness. Tapes should be kept closed in washing to prevent clogging by lint. They can be sewed, stapled, or bonded to many surfaces, but should always be sewed on preshrunk fabrics, for Velcro doesn't shrink and might therefore pucker in washing. If ironed, the iron should not be hotter than 250°. It comes in 12 colors in widths from ⅝" to 2", the greater the width, the greater the strength of the closure. Fasteners from Velcro Sales Corp. Inc.

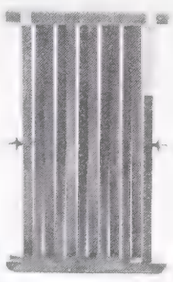
Color marks spots where slipcover may sag. For a sure anchorage, sew 3" Velcro strips on upholstery at these points, and matching tape on underside of slipcovers.



To make an armless chair look upholstered, put hooked Velcro tape at top and base of back. Matching velvety tapes on slipcover latch on. Bottom tabs fold to grip Velcro piece tacked under seat frame.

SKETCHES BY DICK WEST





Slipcover pictured above exhibits two of the commonest causes of the unkempt look—slipcover corners that have slipped out of line with their cushion, and box pleats that have ballooned out of shape. Diagram at top shows how you can keep a cushion cover on the beam by placing corresponding strips of Velcro on sofa corners and on the underside of the slipcover. Diagram directly above shows how to keep box pleats organized: velvet-faced Velcro strips sewed under each pleat adhere to a single hooked strip sewed on the fabric between the pleats.

● How do these differ from hundreds of other outdoor barbecue grills? Check their common characteristics, and you'll learn the qualifications for a broiler grill on which meat can be cooked to taste its best—and be best for you.

Their most important distinction is a design that prevents fat from falling into the fire to flame up and burn. It is burning fat that coats meat with a greasy, sooty smoke that not only has an acrid tar-like flavor, but is suspected of containing cancer-producing hydrocarbons. This subject was discussed in detail from a medical and gastronomical viewpoint in a HOUSE BEAUTIFUL article, "The Last Word on Meat Cooking" (August, 1958).

What makes this space so interesting? The varied planes of the ceiling are part of the answer—light comes in from unexpected places giving you the feeling that more is going on than you can see. The long vista is another part of it—from this family room you can look past the dining area to the master bedroom, a distance of 80 feet. This is architecture used at its best—to convert the monotony of the usual boxy room into an awareness of the fascinating interplay of light and space.

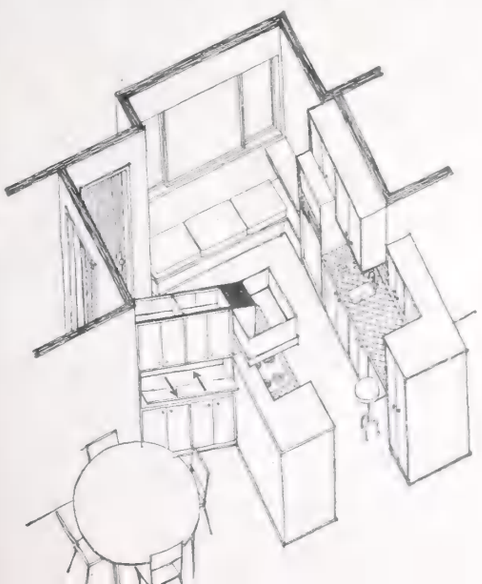
WHAT YOU CAN EXPECT FROM A $40,000 HOUSE
continued

This house has been planned with careful thought for the problem of traffic within it. You don't have to cut through any of the rooms to get from the kitchen to the three bedrooms, the dining area, or the living room. It also allows space for future expansion, where a playroom, porch, garden room, or extra bedroom could go.

Everything in this house has been designed as part of a harmonious whole. This is one of the hallmarks of the more expensive, custom-built house

The family room shows the same kind of approach to the architectural use of space. Its 12′ x 15′ area looks much bigger because of the wide opening to the dining room (foreground) and because of the vaulted ceiling with strongly-accented beams. The fact that the fireplace brick, with its raised hearth, extends the full width of the room keeps the wall from being cut up. The glazed openings under the eaves give the house a luxurious look.

The living room (right) has its own distinctive character. At the top of the page is a view from the dining area, looking through the doorway to the entrance hall. The bank of windows is placed at a height that allows use of a row of cabinets underneath. Below, looking toward the dining-room door, you see how the sectional sofa swings out to give a certain sense of separation from the rooms beyond. Custom-built feeling is added by the triangular windows above the porch doors and the open space over entrance to dining room.



Master bedroom looks roomy, though it is not actually large. The available space is wisely used, and the high ceiling plus the ample windows adds to the light, airy effect. Full wall of closets and built-in dressing counter are examples of little niceties the house provides. Bath and dressing cabinets, counters, and mirrors match (right).

Kitchen-dining area is packed with the kind of extra conveniences found only in luxury homes

This compact, well-engineered kitchen dovetails into minimum space all of the usual elements, plus many extras. A pass-through in the angled wall opens to the dining area. Its hinged door drops to form a serving shelf, closes to cut off view of kitchen. Beside it (right) cabinet top by range has heat lamp built in above to keep food warm until brought to the table. Wash-up center is on kitchen side of pass-through.

How to protect yourself from the summer sun

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S
CLIMATE
PROJECT

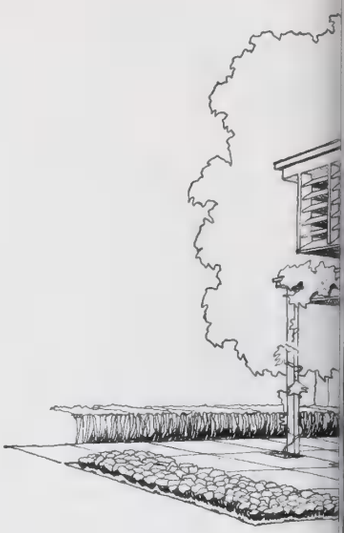
Shade is the problem—where to get it and how to use it. The solution isn't as simple as it might seem at first glance, for all of a sudden you're involved in ventilation, sky glare, heat radiation, and other problems

PHOTOGRAPH BY ROBERT CLEVELAND

Newest form of vertical sunshade is the pierced-concrete block wall. The pattern of this one, made out of standard rounds and squares, allows plenty of light and air, but keeps out almost all of the sun's direct heat-producing rays. Slatted extension of roof overhang keeps high sun off house wall. Residence of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Bell. Nyberg and Bissner, architects.

Sliding canvas sunshades outside this window wall will also guard against the glare from the white summer sky. View at the right, taken at a time when the sun itself was not coming into the room, shows what a problem sky glare alone can be. Panels are set out from the house to allow a free flow of air behind. Mrs. Leslie Lumley home; Thornton Ladd, architect.

● The best—and most natural—shading device is a leafy tree placed in the right location. While you can't always have a tree just where you want it, you can learn one important lesson from the shade a tree creates. It is ventilated shade: though the tree cuts out the sun's rays, it does not prevent movement of air around and upward through the leaves. In the same way, to be successful, any man-made shading device should allow free air movement.



To give you the most summer comfort, this ventilated shade should fall on the walls of your house—particularly the east and west walls—and on your terrace or outdoor living area.

The interior problem is the more crucial of the two, for the heat indoors somehow seems much more oppressive. To cool your rooms, the important thing to remember is that the sun must be kept off the entire wall of the house, not just the windows. For the walls will gradually heat up and in turn transmit the heat to the interior like one giant radiator. With the summer sun passing from east to west almost directly overhead, it is (Please turn the page)

Roof overhang can protect against high-angled sun but a vertical shade maker, like this hanging wood grille, is also needed to screen out the low-angled rays of the afternoon sun from the west.

This dining terrace is on the west side of a Texas house, but because of the shading structure, it's cool even for early evening meals. The vertical louvers of the redwood fence shield the terrace—and the glass-walled dining room behind it — from the low afternoon sun. Harwell Hamilton Harris was the architect.

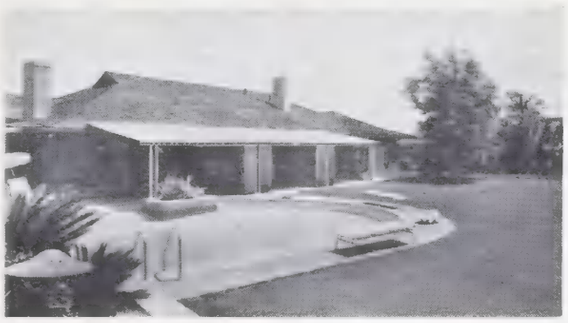
primarily the west wall (in the afternoon), that takes the brunt of the sun. Although a roof overhang can shade this wall to some extent, only a vertical barrier can be really effective during the late hours when the rays are almost horizontal. This is true also of the east wall in the morning, but not to the same extent. On the previous two pages (and in the sketches above) we show good vertical shading devices.



The photographs on these two pages show ways in which terrace areas may be protected so that leisure living can be as comfortable as possible out-of-doors. All of them conform to our requirements for ventilated shade.

Metal venetian awning gives poolside protection to this terrace at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Lewis. Louver angle is completely controllable so that either full shade (left) or broken pattern (above) is possible. Louvers also allow complete ventilation of terrace area and will not cut out all the light from this side of the house. Robert Kliegman, architect; Owen Peters, landscape architect.

This terrace cover at the home of Dr. Donn D. Beeman is a custom-made canvas awning designed to throw enough shade (see shadow pattern lower left) but still open enough to allow full ventilation. An ordinary solid awning here would have trapped hot air against the wall of the house making both the terrace and the interior uncomfortable. C. Jacques Hahn, landscape architect.

Three examples of pressed seaweed prepared by Anne de Carmel, who collects specimens from east and west coast beaches. Unlike land or fresh-water plants, seaweed keeps its natural colors when dried. It also contains its own adhesive to hold it firmly to the paper it is pressed to. After mounting, seaweed can be framed under glass to make handsome decorative panels.

The delicate patterns of seaweed

By ROXA WRIGHT

● A hundred years ago, Victorian ladies collected and pressed seaweed in prim little albums. Today a fresh new form of beauty has mutated from this old art.

Largely responsible is Anne de Carmel, who has combed American shores both east and west for the many seaweed forms and colors (leafy, fuzzy, thready, knobby—the variation is endless). They grow attached to rocks, to be gathered from the shallows at low tide, or are surf borne from the depths of the ocean floor and deposited in profusion along the sand. They come and go at the whim of the sea currents, quite different ones appearing with the change of seasons. Seaweed can be collected from early spring to late fall. The bay sides of offshore islands can be particularly rewarding.

At the beach Mrs. de Carmel establishes home base with a large insulated picnic bag chilled with canned ice to keep specimens fresh. Then she combs the shore, small covered jars in hand, choosing the plants to be brought back in sea water and put, jar and all, in the container. So was the endless flight across a ast Pacific with two restless off-spring. To break the monotony, we layed Rorschach Test with cumu-us clouds. And I told Graham and David how I had learned to be on ny best behavior as a traveler. In he days when Hungary was free, was visiting friends in the Ameri-an Legation in Budapest. On ar-ival, my hostess took me aside. During varied experiences as a diplomat's wife," she said gently, I have met two people from Den-nark. They were both charming. Because of them, I think all Danes re charming. The Hungarians here ave never seen an American girl efore. It is up to you!"

WAY out near Wake Island, today is Saturday, tomorrow s Monday. Have you ever tried o tell the young precisely what akes an entire day disappear at he International Dateline? We re-eated to an easier game, listing or the boys American items which ould not be available on foreign hores—necessities like the comics, amburgers and television.

"You'll miss them. It may be ard," we warned, "but there will e many fascinating new things to ake their place."

Ten hours later, at the Imperial otel in Tokyo, the children bought copy of The Lone Ranger at e newsstand, wolfed down ham-urgers and watched Japanese TV. From then on, security ceased. ext day on the train to ancient yoto, they goggled at the gentle-en passengers sitting blithely in eir underwear, to keep their suits nwrinkled.

It could have been a trial living our to a room in a native Japanese n. Actually we were too intrigued ith odd new customs to think ice about congestion. When raham and David discovered that Japan it was considered polite slurp up the liquids, eat with ud smacks and top it off with a w contented belches, the ensuing et was a perfect horror. Our rlings weren't so keen about the od, however. Things like octopus, l and seaweed disturbed them. nd they couldn't abide that lac-er bowl of hot fish soup for eakfast every morning. So when e Inn offered us an American eakfast (ham-eggzu, and toastu), accepted gratefully. The ham d fried eggs were fairly recog-zable. But the toast. . . .! A ntative bite and young David unched into a fake radio com-ercial. "Friends!" he gushed. "Is your bread made of sponge rub-ber?" Thereafter, we stocked up on U. S. canned goods and ate in Occidental restaurants.

Where do you suppose we brushed our teeth? Over a copper trough filled with lovely rocks at the end of our balcony. In Japan, even the dullest chores are given a magic touch of beauty. You see it in the decorative way housewives thread their laundry on long bam-boo poles to dry. You see it in the graceful shape of everyday tools and utensils. What I saw as a mother were two dear balky boys scrubbing their molars over copper and rocks as they never had over gleaming chrome and enamel. The rocks gave them targets to spit at.

When it comes to washing one's torso, the habitual ritual is to bathe in mixed company with unshakable composure and great dignity. The very thought made us nervous. Yet in every inn, the understanding Japanese gave us the Ofuro room to ourselves.

One day in Kyoto, the children discovered that good manners, like a boomerang, could curve rewardingly back to them. All of us wanted to drive to the Emperor's vacation estate of Katsura whose gardens are so famous. To my husband's chagrin, the Imperial offices in town refused permits for the boys. No one under twenty is ever admitted, they explained, because each verdant tuft of moss is highly revered, and minors can be careless. This was a blow. The boys would have to wait for us in the car.

ON THE appointed morning, accompanied by an interpreter, we drove to the gate of Katsura Detached Palace and decided to make one more try. In front of the guards' lodge the five of us bowed in Japanese fashion to a uniformed official. He bowed to us. Then the interpreter registered our plea.

The guard studied quiet Graham and quiet David. It took him a long time to explain that rules are rules. The boys were crestfallen.

Could the children be allowed, then, to wait for us in the lodge? More bows and the official disappeared into an inner room. At long last he came back and bowed. We bowed. Suddenly our interpreter sucked in his breath and bowed lower than usual. "How remarkable!" he exclaimed turning to my husband with a surprised smile. "Your two sons have just been granted permission to enter the premises with us. It is the first time that such a thing has ever happened. The honorable guard tells me that your sons are so dignified that he will take full responsibility for this decision, himself." Utterly delighted, we sucked in our breaths and bowed. The uniformed gentleman bowed. We proceeded through the poetic gardens, across stepping stones, over arched bridges. Upon our return to the gate the guard met us. We bowed deeply and thanked him. He bowed to us. He had telephoned ahead to Shugakuin Detached Palace describing the exemplary behavior of the two American boys and asked that they be admitted to those grounds, too. Back in the car, Pop and I beamed at the children. "You see?" we said proudly, "You earned this all by yourselves!" We bowed to them. They bowed to us.

IF OUR lads knew how to be proper, they also knew how to run riot. On a wild romp over beach boulders, Graham gashed his legs and needed medical attention. We remembered fretting friends at home: "Supposing you catch some obscure Oriental germ? Will there be any help besides witch doctors?" It was a globe-trotting friend in the export business who reassured us: "We took our kids around Asia, too. If you're in a happy frame of mind and don't look for trouble, you'll remain as healthy as you would in the States." He was right.

For a month and a half we roamed Japan in an easy-going sort of way. With progeny along (who had incidentally brought school-work with them) how necessary to adopt a leisurely pace. From seaside to mountain-top, our family explored Shinto shrines, medieval castles and Buddhist temples. From city to thatched-roof hamlet, we poked through back alleys to watch every kind of craftsman at work over lacquer, loom and pottery wheel.

The evening before we left Japan, as we knelt down to tuck the boys into their floor-quilts, David spoke up. "You know what?" he confided. "I feel very Half-and-Half." Then he explained. "You see, I know American customs, and I know Japanese customs. And I like them both—one just as much as the other."

Gorgeous, dramatic Hong Kong, hugging an island crowned with steep wooded hills! A free port. Low prices. Shopping, fittings and more shopping! The children's feet began to drag.

Luckily there were compensations for them both. Besides the kick of riding British double-decker buses and bowling along in bright red rickshaws, they enjoyed being sculled in a sampan out to the floating restaurant at Aberdeen. And they adored the Tiger Balm Gardens, that nightmare of revolting colored rockwork—especially a terrace where beheaded statues exude crimson cement gore. But the treat of treats for the boys was a sterile restaurant called The Dairy Farm. In Japan, we had had to be cautious—nothing uncooked, unbottled or unboiled. In Hong Kong the lid was off on salads, fresh milk, and ice cream sundaes. We couldn't stuff them full enough.

And then as a telling contrast, we took the youngsters to the outskirts of Kowloon to show them a grim scene which is the British Crown Colony's dilemma—the living conditions of tens of thousands of refugees from Red China—too many to house, clothe or feed. On sidewalk after sidewalk we saw masses of destitute Chinese humanity packed together in indescribable filth and squalor. Ever since, whenever our lads take things too much for granted, we remind them of the refugees. It has a humbling effect.

Japan had been cold. Hong Kong springlike. December in Siam (now known as Thailand) hit us with a hot tropical blast. Downtown Bangkok is commercial and drab. All any of us wanted was to sit under the punkah fan on our covered balcony and watch the river boats go by.

Only when we were drifting in the early morning sunlight through a labyrinth of narrow canals lined with wooden houses did Bangkok begin to reveal herself. There was activity everywhere: saronged citizens on front platforms crouching down to a bowl of breakfast; mothers standing on submerged ladders doing the laundry; naked children splashing in the water along with the family ducks. Sculling from house to house, loaded dugouts were doing a lively business in colored shirts, cooking pots and papayas. "What a neat life," remarked David. "You can swim across the street and drip in on your neighbors."

THE best was to come. When we paused in the shadow of a gate just tailored for king-size elephants at Chakri Grand Palace—when we stood gazing up at an intricately carved gold throne, four American spines began to tingle. Pop hummed a tune from The King and I as we wandered past gorgeous pavilions, temples with curly roofs, rows of exotic chedi towers.

Too soon we were aloft on our way to Phnom Penh. The capital of Cambodia had scorching streets full of galloping pony carts. Bicycle rickshaws (with intrepid passengers riding in front) were converging on every corner at a mad clip. Lunching late on the sidewalk of a French cafe, the four of us looked up from our omelettes, and there, swaying ponderously past, was an elephant with mahout and two passengers aboard. From then on, the boys could think of only one thing—taking home a pachyderm for carpools to school.

Naturally we visited the Royal Elephant Stables. The kids also reveled in a tour through the Palace: the Queen's incredible lavalieres; the King's collection of crowns and cermonial hats, including an ordinary black derby with a nobby pagoda of diamonds perched on top.

Presently we were driving across bumpy causeways through the swamps headed for the fabulous ruins of Angkor Wat. Here was ancient grandeur on a leg-tiring basis. My husband and I dawdled over miles of intricately carved Hindu frieze. The children didn't. They went berserk over something else—a new kind of gargantuan jungle gym, Oriental style. Steep flights of exterior stone stairways led into extrarodinary towers and chambers full of bats. The boys were far above us, yoo-hooing from every pinnacle.

DEEP IN the jungle, the Monastery of Ta Prohm had not been cleared. For 600 years, huge tree roots have been splitting the massive masonry apart. Wild monkeys scampered across the terrace. To heighten the atmosphere, a glowering band of half-naked men with cross-bows closed in on us. Shakily, we dubbed them "The Head-hunters." A remote spot. The Prohm, and all we had for weapons were watercolor brushes. So we smiled at them. Their response was beatific. Graham, by pointing, learned how to say "arrow" and "cross-bow" in Cambodian, and they showed him how to shoot the lethal things. Then he and David gave each man a piece of hard candy. To natives who customarily eat succulent insects the size of tarantulas, candy was puzzling. It took a demonstration but when we left, our fierce friends were sucking happily.

Back in Bangkok, Christmastime was looming. Graham and David were prepared for a make-shift celebration in a Buddhist land. The father and I counted up the things we had hoarded for them: small Santas, miniature holly wreaths, tiny tinsel trees and a special cache of bubble gum which had traveled with us all the way from California.

I set out in the sweltering heat to track down a few yards of gold ribbon. The first shop that caught my eye said Merry Christmas in gaudy letters. It had holly wreaths for sale. The next store window displayed a cotton hillock. In it were a whole slew of Santa Clauses on skiis. Deflated, I turned the corner into Suriwongse Road. Standing there, was a sidewalk vendor. His glass case was stacked with American bubble gum—same brand.

For the benefit of two ex-beachcombers we jumped south of the Equator to Indonesia and the island of Bali. True to form, und white strands with leaning lms. a blue-green seascape and r-out coral reefs tasseled with am. Shells in rainbow colors and eces of red coral were strewn ross the sands. The water was a oid calm. Cousin Kenneth led us on a cosy exploration of Government House. the crenelated Tudor mansion where the Queen and Prince Philip stayed during their Pacific Tour. In rapture. our eldest sat down on the same couch cushion which the Queen had occupied.

Three glorious weeks went fast. Towards the end of January. the S. S. Orsova sailed from Sydney's Woolloomooloo pier and we were on her. Cousin Kenneth. with policemen saluting. drove us right to the gangplank and presented the boys with a replica of his official flag. As our ship glided down the magnificent harbor. all four of us hugged the rail in silence. For once. the children seemed subdued. As the shoreline receded. David finally put it into words for all of us: "Something kind of hurts me inside to leave Australia." He was feeling Half-and-Half again.

Ever since October. we had been hopping about the map like a quartet of synchronized fleas. Now. as planned. came leisure—leisure to sit dreamily on deck sorting out travel impressions before diving back into the pressure of life at home. While the Orsova spent twenty-one days cruising to New Zealand. Fiji. Hawaii. Canada. we spent twenty-one mornings not on deck. but at desks running a cram-session for two lads with unfinished homework. For twenty-one afternoons we attempted to catch up on diaries and thank you letters. We never did ease into deck chairs.

Back at home there were things to wonder about. Could the boys slide back into school after a four-month absence without feeling too far behind? And had we really succeeded in giving them a deep desire for unbiased friendships throughout a troubled world?

ONE evening we knelt down together for family prayers. Usually each of us takes turns blessing and thanking. Tonight Graham had a great deal to say so we listened. "Please God bless Tjokorda Gde Agung and all three of his Balinese wives," he began. Whereupon he proceeded to bless every individual we had met on our trip—from rickshaw man to museum director—from jungle native to diplomat. By the time he reached Peter Pole. senior quartermaster aboard the Orsova. half an hour had whizzed by. David was wiggling with pleasure. These people of all nations. races and religions were the children's cherished friends. My husband looked at me with a twinkle. "Operation Nivnog —mission completed," he said.

sometimes do on our lower bank—this releases a whole flood of fascinating speculations about Indian uprisings. All the boys seem to need is an attentive ear and out flows all their information and observations on the world around them. It's a great delight for me to share in these early stages of their growth."

The Gateses also provide great tolerance for "messes." They put up with all the experiments that children dearly love and parents have little taste for—experiments with paints, soapy water, make-up, and mud. This is all part of the rapport that exists between children and their permissive grandparents. The youngsters simply know that they're not going to be denied, and the grandparents bask in the reflected happiness of granting innocent requests that may end up in messes. But these messes, they rationalize, are part and parcel of the learning process for children.

Since settling in Southern California in 1955, Mr. Gates, released from job commitments and civic responsibilities, has pursued such pleasurable hobbies as woodworking, painting, bolo tie-making, and gardening. Mrs. Gates has tried her hand at mosaics, enameling, and bricklaying. By watching their grandparents working with their hobbies and then asking to try them, these fortunate children have acquired a beginner's acquaintance with all these skills.

Grandpa Gates has also exposed his grandchildren to the pleasures of collecting shells, rocks, and relics, so that pretty nearly anywhere they go, the grandchildren always find something of interest within their constantly expanding frame of reference.

"Matter of fact," Mr. Gates points out, "there isn't anything Lois and I do that the grandchildren can't enter into. Naturally when the small ones start a cake or a painting, we help them. When their attention lags, we finish the project. But lately with the bigger boys, we've started to learn from them. They originate their own ideas working independently and bring the finished product to us. Then when we see what they've made, we feel genuinely rewarded for having launched them with what little we know."

When it comes to extra-curricular pursuits, grandparents can enrich and augment children's cultural diets far beyond the limits of youngish parents. In many families the children are far more open-minded about their grandparents' taste than that of their own parents. Somehow, coming from a father or mother, the better forms of music, art, and drama often seem like lessons but with grandparents they're a lark. Grandparents have completed their doing-what's-good-for-the-soul period and won't suffer through a concert or museum that doesn't absolutely thrill them. The children sense the difference and are often more willing to accompany a grandparent than a parent on an outing of cultural uplift. The Gateses certainly have found this to be true.

Grandparents, too, make a continuing contribution to the cultural mores of our society. They have an unobtrusive way of introducing graciousness and good manners to a harum-scarum generation. True, some of these customs may seem fussy and beyond the ken of today's no-frills parents. But ever since schools dropped the word "deportment" and strict nannies became few and far between, it has done no harm for growing youngster to be exposed to a few of the niceties of an earlier era. Being cognizant that a gentleman stands in the presence of a lady, that finger bowls are just for the tips of the fingers, and that thank-you notes are handwritten, can only broaden their frame of experience and add polish to a child's normal good behavior.

The Gateses themselves would be the last to admit that they are even partially responsible for their grandchildren's charm and ease of manner, and yet, by their very softness of voice and unhurried air they set an attractive example for the young members of the family. They know how to live beautifully without pretense or affectation. In their home, tea is served in an heirloom silver service, not a tea bag in a cup. Cut flowers are never allowed to remain a day too long. And no guest leaves the place without a token gift—either one of Mr. Gates's bolo ties, a slip from the garden, or a homemade treat. But on holidays and special occasions, they "do things up brown" with decorations, delicacies and surprises for everyone.

In the last analysis, if you ask the grandchildren why they really like their favorite grandparents, they will tell you "It's because grandparents are so much fun." And that's quite true. Grandpa Gates was born with a twinkle in his eye and a talent for pranks. Having four fellow conspirators has only served to sharpen his wit and outdo his past record.

In the course of an ordinary day he's apt to put on a half-dozen different hats. With each change of costume goes a change of character. When he's wearing his yachting cap, he's an old salt, spouting yarns and singing chanteys. In his sombrero he accompanies himself on the guitar and sings the wildest lyrics. When a romantic mood suits him, he'll wear a Hawaiian shirt and fill the house with strains of Aloha. The children just eat up this sort of mad fantasy.

One memorable party engineered by Grandpa Gates is remembered by the children as "The Great Buried Treasure Hunt." A week before Cory's birthday, Mr. Gates began his elaborate preparations. He uprooted some of the brickwork around the base of the oldest eucalyptus tree on his property. Then in and among the roots he buried an old box of costume jewelry and tarnished coins. He carefully replaced the dirt and bricks. He then drew a map on heavy paper and aged it in the oven.

Came the day of the party and the grandchildren and friends arrived expecting lunch and a swimming party—nothing more. But slowly Grandpa began narrating a story of his own concoction. He had once befriended a Mexican pursued by the police. In gratitude the Mexican had given him this old pirate's map. He passed it around.

Because the Gates home is built on the site of an old Mexican ranch and because they had once actually seen the police chasing a vagrant along the palisades, the boys found the story plausible. They listened eagerly as Grandfather spun the details. When he finished, they grabbed his map and were off.

After considerable exploring and lculation they stopped at the se of the huge tree. The bricks ound the base stumped them for while, but they were sure this s the very tree shown on the ap. The boys looked at Mr. Gates. f you're sure this is the right e." he said, "go ahead."

Up came the bricks and the dirt and there, after fifteen minutes digging, was the buried treasure. nat excitement! The children ent the rest of the afternoon di- ling the loot and the rest of the nmer debating its value. They re sure the coins were authentic t not so sure about the jewelry. ey asked their parents and, un- mantic realists that they are, the rents confessed that the jewelry s paste. But Grandpa Gates had much more ready and romantic planation. It was the pirates, he claimed, who'd been fooled by the phony gems—not they. And to this day, the neighborhood still talks about Cory's tenth birthday.

In countless ways the Gateses have cushioned the bumps for their grandchildren. Their daughter-in-law Barbara says, "It's my ambition to be just like them when I'm a grandparent because they've consciously worked out the art of being grandparents to near perfection. They give Russ and me their unquestioning support. They never interfere with us until we first consult them. Having raised their own set of children, they're not about to raise ours. But they serve as guides on whom we can fall back in moments of distress. They are there when we need them, their very presence making life easier and happier for all of us."

YOU CAN PRESERVE THE DELICATE PATTERNS OF SEAWEED

mens cold and in seawater, you can improvise any method or equipment of your own you want to.

Once home with her treasure, Mrs. de Carmel stores the jars in the refrigerator until ready to start mounting. This should be done as soon as possible because some varieties, particularly the pink ones, start to lose their original color unless mounted while very fresh.

Mounting equipment is simple. You will need a shallow pan. An 11″ x 16″ aluminum jelly-roll pan is fine for moderate-size mountings, a hotel-size pan for larger compositions. It is better if the pan is not deeper than an inch or so. Have a number of pieces of the least expensive grade of glass cut to fit the bottom of the pan. Each mounting will need glass above and below it for several days until it is thoroughly dry, so have a good supply if you intend to make very many. You should also have at hand a supply of paper towels, pieces of old sheets, a largish watercolor brush, and mounting paper. Use a good grade of ungrained water-color paper for mounting. Where translucency is desired, use heavy vellum tracing paper. Little ones can even be mounted on cards. Remember, the better the paper you use, the less likelihood there will be of wrinkles.

Place the glass in the pan. Half a folded paper towel should be tucked under each end to help later in lifting the glass. Cover with about one-half inch of clean, fresh water. Submerge a piece of mounting paper, somewhat smaller than the glass, and allow it to smooth onto the glass.

Now choose your sprigs of seaweed. You can prune them to get the shapes you want. Sometimes you can use only one variety. Or try combining several in a single composition. Remember, this is a picture, not a salad, and a little goes a long way. Some seaweed has small bubble-like nodules. Puncture these with a pin so they will deflate later when pressed.

Next wash the selected specimens in fresh water to remove any loose or foreign material and float them over the paper in the pan. A large pointed camel's-hair brush or Chinese writing brush is a good tool with which to persuade the seaweed to stay where you want it. Use scissors for snipping.

Once the specimens are in the position you like, carefully lift the glass out of the water with as little movement as possible and place it crosswise to rest on the sides of the pan to drain.

A little more arranging with the brush is still possible at this point. Since seaweed has its own built-in glue, all that remains to do is to blot, press and dry.

After most of the water has drained off, cover with a piece of old sheet (cheesecloth is an almost-as-good substitute), then with a couple of layers of paper towels and another piece of glass. Add weight—a pile of magazines, the phone book, or even a stone. After about five minutes, change the paper towels without moving the cloth covering.

From then on the only attention the mountings will need is a change of paper towels to prevent mildew. Do this every 4 hours at first (you can skip it at night) and a couple of times a day as they get dryer. After the cloth is dry to the touch, peel it off carefully and use only towels until the mounting is bone-dry. It should, however, be under some pressure.

If you are making several mountings at one time, they can be stacked, sandwich-fashion, and one weight on top of the stack will do for all.

It may take as long as two weeks in very humid weather for the mountings to dry thoroughly. If you need to transport them while still stacked, wrap them up, weight and all, in a piece of plastic sheeting or oilcloth.

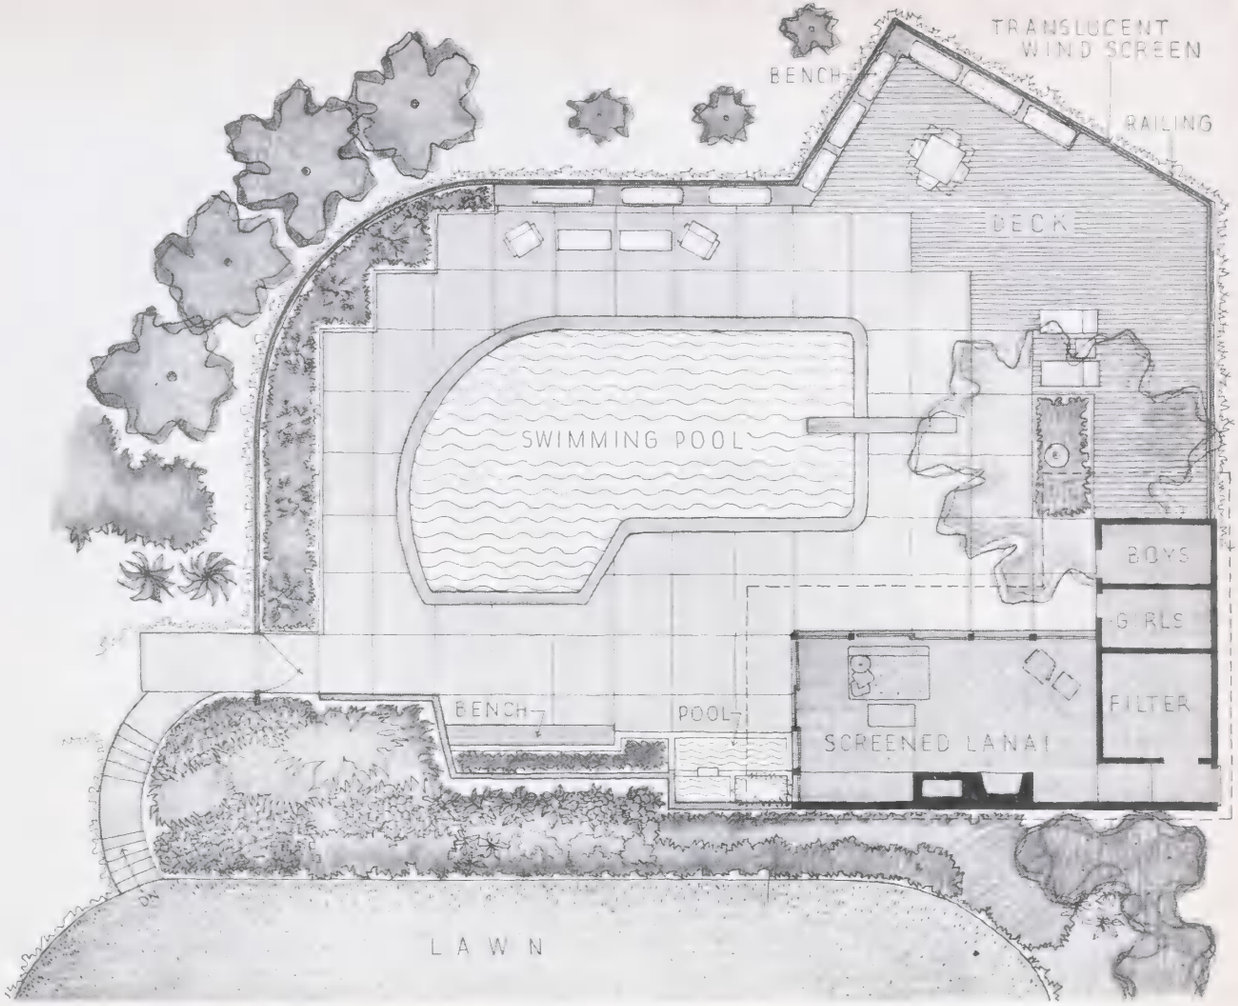
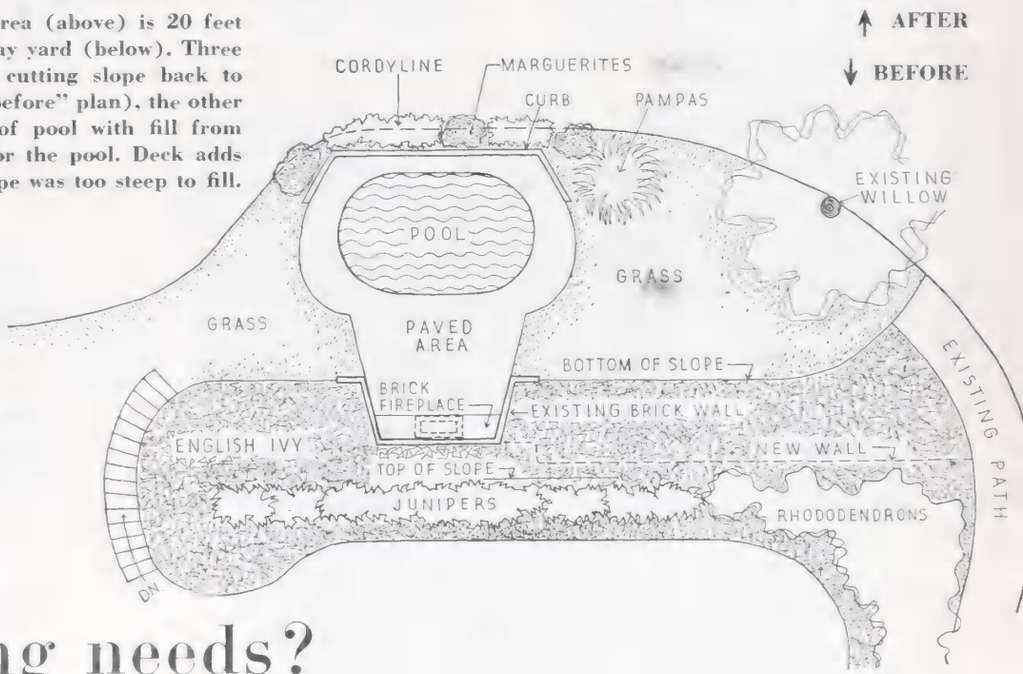
Is your garden keeping pace with your



To keep up with the varied interests of a growing family, a garden must change too. Here is one that has done so—beautifully

BY CARROLL CALKINS



● Do you and your family find you aren't getting as much enjoyment from your garden as you used to? The change may be so gradual you hardly recognize it, but evidence accumulates. Watch for signs like these that your garden and family are drifting apart: the sand box that's still there when you really need a backboard for basketball; the less-than-perfect flower bed that was a pride and joy when you had more time to garden; or the expanse of lawn once mowed by a vigorous young son who has gone on to other jobs.

In this garden at the Stephen Jensens', the evidence of obsolescence was the children's loss of interest in the old wading pool and fireplace. (Please turn the page)

The new recreation area (above) is 20 feet wider than the old play yard (below). Three feet were gained by cutting slope back to new wall (shown in "before" plan), the other 17 feet on far side of pool with fill from cut and excavation for the pool. Deck adds more space where slope was too steep to fill.

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Before: Original pool was just a basin of concrete too shallow for diving or swimming. But it was wonderfully refreshing for splashing about and a safe place to learn to swim without fear of the depth. To make wider terrace, slope in foreground was cut back and retained with a wall. Slope beyond was filled in.

Diving board is at narrow end of pool, which fans out at other end for more swimming space and leaves more room for lounging here. Open seat rail doesn't hide view. Translucent plastic-filled screen on redwood frame makes wind-free sun pocket. Lanai is at the right.

Wood deck extends paved terrace to make pleasant sitting area with shade from willow tree, wind protection from the high screen and the comfort of adjoining lanai. Outdoor furniture by Van Keppel-Green.

IS YOUR GARDEN KEEPING PACE WITH YOUR FAMILY'S CHANGING NEEDS?

For years this was the center of summer fun. Suddenly it was deserted. The children who splashed happily here and toasted marshmallows in the fireplace had become young adults with more sophisticated tastes.

The new swimming pool, terrace, and lanai, designed by Landscape Architect Robert W. Babcock, brought a new life to this part of the garden. It is now a recreation center for the entire family. They use it together—and separately—for entertaining. It also brings new beauty to the garden. The dramatic lighting of the big willow, the lanai, and pool has made a delightful nighttime scene of an erstwhile black void.

Here's how a difficult problem was turned to good account. After cutting into the slope to make more flat space for the pool, a six-foot bank was left and had to be retained. Concrete block wall was terraced to include planting beds and this two-level pool. Water is recirculated from lower pool back to the giant clam shell.

Scientific Research Recognizes ıptoms and Prescribes the Diet

With shade trees the sign of starvation is not losing girth. Their symptoms are not as obvious but like all living bodies they do have nutritional requirements which affect their growth, susceptibility to disease and even survival. Recognizing tree ailments before serious damage is done takes skill and professional training—prescribing for them calls for definite knowledge based on scientific research.

When you engage Bartlett to examine and protect your trees, guesswork with its so often tragic results is eliminated. You get the benefit of trained technicians, plus the combined experience and knowledge of the Bartlett Research Laboratories. This outstanding organization of shade tree scientists, specialists for more than fifty years in tree care, has many outstanding advances in tree hygiene to its credit. With Bartlett you know that each step in diagnosis and procedure is in scientifically guided hands and protected by scientific standards of practice.

Your trees are too valuable to entrust to the haphazard mercies of rule of thumb methods. Judged by results you will find The Bartlett Way—the scientific way, the safest and most economical. Consult your Bartlett Tree Expert today—you will profit by his recommendations.

Strange as it seems

You can plant green onions now

Your reward will be tender tangy scallions in the fall of the year

By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

• The green onion, or scallion, that I often think is the best of all has been neglected. I mean the Egyptian onion (Allium bulbelifera), sometimes called the top, red, tree, winter and multiplier onion. They aren't red, don't resemble trees, and I have heard that they are native to North America. But they are winter onions, known at least as far north as New York and Pittsburgh (there may be some casualties in a severe winter), and they multiply, often making two or three scallions from a single set.

Egyptian sets are available in August. One can find almost anything in New York City—even truck farming—but no Egyptian onion sets, so I order mine from The I. W. Scott Co., 500 Liberty Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa. As soon as they come in I plant them—a little deeper than the ordinary set which is buried just up to its neck.

In the fall they grow to tiny scallions for the delicate palate, and those that remain to winter in the ground push fast when the spring sun arrives, making large green onions that reach the kitchen weeks before the regular spring crop from sets. They never make edible bulbs, but only develop scallions, like other bunch onions you may see in the catalogues.

DRAWING BY DON ALMQUIST

Sets at top of Egyptian onion can be used for new plants next year.

In my opinion onions prosper best on a rich, sandy loam well stocked with organic decay, a trifle on the acid side (pH 6.0 to 6.5 in loam, as low as pH 5.5 if the soil is heavier) and well drained. They feed heavily and need plenty of water during their green growing days to keep them succulent.

Egyptians are perennials. If you plant them, leave a few to mature their tops and arouse the wonder of visiting city folk. They grow not flowers and seeds like other orthodox onions on top of the stem but bunches of sets.

Although few creatures want to eat onions, some cutworms, a maggot, a thrip, cattle, and the human tribe all have a taste for them, as well as certain microorganisms that cause various blights on the onion family. Well, on my set-grown onions I have never used a dust or spray and my losses have been too small to remember. In fact, my onions have been as blight-proof as those lilies of the lawn called wild onions—and with confidence I wish you the same luck.

said he followed it to the letter.

- They like a rich, moist, well-drained soil.
- Add to the soil well-rotted manure and a little lime.
- Set roots 2 or 3 inches below the surface of the soil.
- Shade their root run (the soil area through which the roots extend) with a groundcover, or a mulch of some sort.
- Provide a support and tie them up as soon as they are planted.
- Give them a mulch of well-rotted manure every autumn.
- Add lime in spring to keep soil on the alkaline side.

Some of this formula may rightly be questioned by a few clematis growers. In some areas, well-rotted manure may make the soil too acid. And in limestone areas added lime may not be needed. The choice of mulch for winter protection varies in different parts of the country and includes crushed shells, buckwheat hulls, sawdust, and other local products.

Many "hardy" perennials and flowering shrubs may not weather an open winter such as the one we had in 1958-59, but clematis can and did. The roots, if not the vines, survived to send up new shoots that will flower again.

No special skill is required for planting, except that you should give them the kind of soil they thrive in and not put them in a windy place. It isn't necessary or desirable to cultivate close to the vines during summer. The groundcover that shades the roots smothers any weeds that might sprout. Once planted, let clematis alone except to mulch vines in November, lime them in spring, water during a dry summer to assure continued bloom of normal size, or prune and train to supports.

Pruning requires no special skill but it should not be done until vines are well established. The vines are such a tangled mass of brown in early spring that the can be most confusing when you start to prune. While the basic rule of pruning applies—cut out any dead wood in spring—don't snip too hastily on clematis. The brownest, deadest part of the vine may send out quantities of new green shoots that produce flowers.

Clematis are pruned according to their time of bloom. Those that bloom in spring produce flowers on old wood and should not be pruned until after they finish flowering. Summer- and fall-blooming varieties produce flowers on new wood and should be pruned in winter or early spring while still dormant. They may be cut back every year to a height of about three feet which will encourage new growth

Or they may be pruned lightly to encourage height by thinning out the weaker stems to stimulate strong growth on the others.

If vines are trained to form a pattern against a section of the house or on a post as a focal point, then they should be pruned heavily.

If you prune somewhat energetically for a couple of years, don't worry, for the finest and biggest flowers result from severe cutting. And remember that taking flowers to bring in the house is a most satisfying way to prune.

Two or three blooms of Lawsoniana floating in a shallow bowl look perfect for as long as eight days. The double white Duchess of Edinburgh can be used in taller vases and lasts almost as well. So do many others.

Hand in hand with pruning goes training and tying. Clematis will attach itself by means of leafstalks to a string or wire. But the lengths of vine will need some tying to keep them in the direction you want them to go. Twist the material around the support and then tie around the stem in a small figure eight. Against walls or bricks, hooks can be attached with a special cement and the vines slipped through the hook or tied to it.

It's true that clematis flower best in sun but many of them also bloom quite well in a partly shaded spot. They make fine accent plants for an entrance or terrace, beautiful patterns and displays trained against a house or fence; they can be naturalized over a tree stump.

Guide to Seasons of Bloom

Of the forty or more kinds of clematis available today, the majority are large-flowered hybrids. In comparison, all species native to Asia, Europe and North America have small flowers. Some of the most useful species and hybrids are listed here by season of bloom. The asterisk marks varieties that repeat their bloom during the season.

Early Spring

Clematis montana alba, white flowers, about 2 inches; Clematis montana rubens, deep pink flowers, about 2 inches; Clematis montana undulata, mauve pink, about 2 inches.

Late Spring

C. macropetala Markham's Pink, semi-double pink, 3-4 inches: C. florida *Duchess of Edinburgh, double white, 2-4 inches; C. henryi, white, to 8 inches; C. lawsoniana*, lavender blue, 5 inches or more: Nelly Moser, mauve with red bar on each petal, 3 inches: William Kennett, deep lavender, 5 inches or more.

Early Summer

C. jackmani, violet purple, 3-4 inches (Jackmani hybrids): Comtesse de Bouchard, rose pink, satiny, 3-4 inches; *Crimson Star, red, 4 inches: *Mme. Edouard Andre, red, 3-4 inches: *Mrs. Cholmondeley, wisteria blue, 4 inches or more: *Candida, white, 4 inches or more: *Fairy Queen, pale pink with darker bars, 3 inches: *Prins Hendrik, sky blue, ruffled, 7 inches; *Ramona, lavender blue, 3 inches.

Midsummer

Late Summer

Tangutica, yellow, dropping lanterns: Mrs. Robert Brydon, small in clusters, pale blue.

Early Autumn

fruits: Persian lime, lemon, orange, and tangerine.

Make sure that they have not been dyed (color added) and wash to remove any traces of spray or chemicals. Peel the fruit very, very thin so that there will be no hint of the white part. Use a potato peeler and, if possible keep the rind whole or in corkscrew form. Put one fruit peel in a fifth of vodka (80 proof). One day of immersion will be sufficient to produce an ineffable bouquet and a pleasant glow. The peel should be left in the bottle.

Serve these fruit vodkas on the rocks, with soda, or in drinks mixed with fruit juice.

Apple vodka can be a delight and surprise when made with a good aromatic red apple. Half the skin of an average fruit should be sufficient. Pamper yourself and your guests by using this delicate rose-tinted, apple-scented vodka in a new drink known as the Knocker: pour one jigger of vodka in a highball glass with ice and fill to the brim with bottled apple juice. Garnish with a slice of apple.

Dr. Gallizio's special pride among his bevy of discoveries is one in which he uses half of the peel of one medium-size bright green cucumber. Add the cucumber peel to a fifth of vodka and also add several grains of whole black pepper and a couple of dry whole chili peppers, the kind that you get in any store. You'll want peppers that are one-half to one inch long.

To make a Bloody Mary cocktail with this flavored vodka, use a jigger of vodka, 3 ounces of tomato juice, ½ ounce of fresh lemon juice, a dash of salt. Shake well or blend with cracked ice. No other spicing will be needed.

Celery vodka is another excellent choice for a Bloody Mary. Use the outside leaves of celery, preferably homegrown green Pascal celery. Three or four sprays should be sufficient. Add also 1 teaspoon celery seed and 2 small dried red chili peppers. This vodka is fine as an addition to a bottle of celery tonic.

Parsley vodka is so beautiful that we couldn't refrain from setting the decanter inside of a wreath of flowers as a centerpiece for a Sunday brunch. Italian parsley has the best flavor, but the regular curly parsley will do.

Very good too is that Hollywood invention known as the Bullshot! A jigger of vodka in an old-fashioned glass with ice. Fill with chilled condensed bouillon and stir. Garnish with parsley and a twist of lemon. This can also be served steaming hot as a blessed contrast to an otherwise all-cold meal.

Minted vodka is delightful to serve chilled on the rocks. Garnish with mint and a fresh berry or a cherry. You can use it in a highball or a short julep over crushed ice in an old-fashioned glass. Garnish with sprays of mint and a powdering of sugar if you like.

Fennel fronds gleam like a green etching under glass. To achieve a delightfully dry and aromatic spirit, use the young tips of 2 or 3 fronds and add ½ teaspoon fennel seed. Fennel-flavored vodka is a joy to use in a Bloody Mary or you might try this Tipsy Clam Juice cocktail. Add the vodka to 1 tablespoon tomato ketchup spiked with a cup of fresh clam juice (or an 8-oz. bottle). Serve on the rocks or over crushed ice as a frappé.

Dill may be used exactly like fennel. A dash of dill-flavored vodka adds a note of enchantment to frozen cream of shrimp soup.

Woodruff is a natural as a flavoring for vodka in summertime.

Most of the top-flight specialty shops will have it almost all the year round. (For one source see the box at the end of this article.)

To make a woodruff-flavored May wine put a jigger of flavored vodka in a tall glass, add 3 or 4 ice cubes, add wine to about 2 inches from the top of the glass, and finish with chilled sparkling water. Garnish with fresh woodruff, the leaves and the flowers and/or sliced fruits and fresh berries.

Wormwood is perhaps the most esoteric of the flavored vodkas developed by Dr. Gallizio. Wormwood is the essential flavoring of absinthe and all the vermouths as well as Pernod, even the pastiches of the south of France contain this delightful flavoring. Any of the popular wormwoods that grow in herb gardens may be used to make this infusion, but Dr. Gallizio suggests that the type called absinthium pontica is most appropriate. Select dried or fresh wormwood—small twigs complete with leaves and flowers. A branch 5 or 6 inches long is sufficient to flavor a fifth of vodka. "A single day of immersion," to quote Dr. Gallizio, "is sufficient to produce an evanescent bouquet and a pleasing green color.

This absinthe-like vodka may be used in any of the classic vodka drinks except perhaps the Bloody Mary, but it is particularly good served by itself on the rocks with only a slice of orange.

Fines herbes vodka is made by adding a combination of fresh or dried herbs—1 spray of each herb or 1 teaspoon of dried herb: tarragon, chervil, chives, etc. Use this in Bloody Marys, Bullshots, or in salad dressings, soups, sauces, or omelets.

Borage vodka is used in Pimm's Cups, spritzers, wine cups, or Bloody Marys. Make it by adding a few fresh or dried sprays of borage with flowers.

These vodka infusions will keep for many weeks, although the fresh herbs and peels will gradually lose their color. The color of the vodka, however, will intensify with time.

Perhaps the most startling and talk-provoking of all vodinkas is made by adding half a dozen black peppercorns (Java, Telicherry, or the Pili Pili of Africa) to a fifth of vodka along with a piece of gold or silver leaf about three inches square.

Add a single leaf of gold or silver to a fifth of vodka and shake to break it into glittering bits. Always shake the bottle again before serving for the gold and silver sink prosaically to the bottom when it settles. The Russians serve it in tiny glasses—fiercely cold—with caviar, of course!

Borage, woodruff, wormwood or yarrow (in packages that hold enough to make several bottles) and gold or silver leaf in packages of four squares each are available at Caswell-Massey Co., Ltd., 518 Lexington Ave., New York 17, N.Y. Any one item will be sent postpaid for a dollar.

Between, above, below, and beyond all these interests ran the thread of his regular business for the summer. It was some time before I learned what this business was, and I was so dense and unobservant that I finally had to be told. I was having a quiet nap in the warm sun after our vigorous morning swim.

"Why are you wandering to sleep?" Mike inquired impatiently in my ear. "Aren't you listening to me? I was telling you that it is very important for you never to carry away the purple pencil that I keep on the chest by my bed, because I need it every day in my business."

"That so?" I asked sleepily. "What business is that?"

Mike answered meditatively. "I'm in the business of inventing things by mistake."

LATE in August we went north to the Canoe Country for a two-week trip. The Canoe Country is lovely but severe, with a sad, lonely beauty. The landscape is all blue and green—blue sky, green pines, green moss, blue water—so that after some days my eyes longed for some small fleck of another color, a darting butterfly, a wild flower, a bird's wing. But none of these did we see; nor were there insects or small friendly animals or any of the other inhabitants I had expected in the woods. Life seemed thin, harsh, uncompromising, a simple struggle for existence on the part of the pine trees digging their toes into the gray granite, with no room for softness or for ornament.

In spite of this severity, we enjoyed the coolness, the quiet, the solitude. Mike liked these, too. But sometimes his buoyant enthusiasm, his active curiosity, his gaiety, seemed to have left him.

Of course, canoeing, portaging, and setting up camp were new to him and fun. He set up a hideaway for himself on a little rocky point near our main campsite, and busied himself for hours a day there in a world of his own making. He swam once—as we all did, but only once!—in the freezing cold water. He ate the outdoor meals with gusto, listened with fascination to the guide's wild stories beside the campfire, gloated the day he caught the biggest fish.

On our last night on Lake McIntyre, everyone else hiked to a neighboring lake to try the fishing. Just Mike and I were left in camp, and we sat for a long time on the rocky point without speaking, watching an exquisite but pale and plaintive sunset. As it faded, Mike broke the silence.

"You know, we'll never see that sunset again," he said. "It's just the same as thinking about dying to think about it, to know that it's gone forever and you can never ever any way get it back."

I couldn't answer. I remembered an evening when I, too, must have been about seven. I sat on my grandmother's porch steps, thinking things without knowing any reason for my thoughts except that they were in some way mixed up with the sunset.

Next morning as we broke camp, Mike walked over to where I was packing the last piece of our camp gear and offered me a confidence.

"This has been very hard to decide," he said gravely, "but I've been thinking about it the whole two weeks here in the woods, and I know now what I must do. You know Crackle, my little cloth puppet, has been sleeping with me every night since I was very small? But I'm getting too old for that now, and as soon as I get home I must tell him so."

His face clouded.

"I must explain it to him very carefully, because Crackle loves me a great deal and I love him, and I don't want to hurt his feelings. We've been friends such a long time, and so many times I couldn't have gone to sleep without telling him my troubles. But if I tell him that we'll still be friends, and talk to each other, and that I'll fix him a place of his own on the shelf, I think he'll understand. Don't you?"

Our first night home, when I went to kiss Mike goodnight, he was almost—but not quite—in tears.

"I've told Crackle," he said bravely, "and he says he understands and he forgives me."

SEPTEMBER here is sapphire and gold; sapphire like the blue of Lake Superior, and gold in all its tones and imitators, in amber and orange and copper. The first yellowish-green trees of the fall on the Big Island have a haunting character, like the ghosts of spring. But from then on, the yellows get more vivid.

The window boxes glow with the last few nasturtiums, their leaves so yellowed they almost match the blossoms, and then we know for sure it's time to get ready for the early and long Northern Wisconsin winter. The yellow school buses suddenly start sweeping the countryside bare at eight o'clock every morning, raking the yards and roadsides empty of the children who've played there all summer. Suddenly the late summer melancholy is past, and life is golden again, in a resurgence of zest and hope and ambition.

Last week I found a new sign on Mike's bedroom door:

FINGERPRINTS CHARACTERS
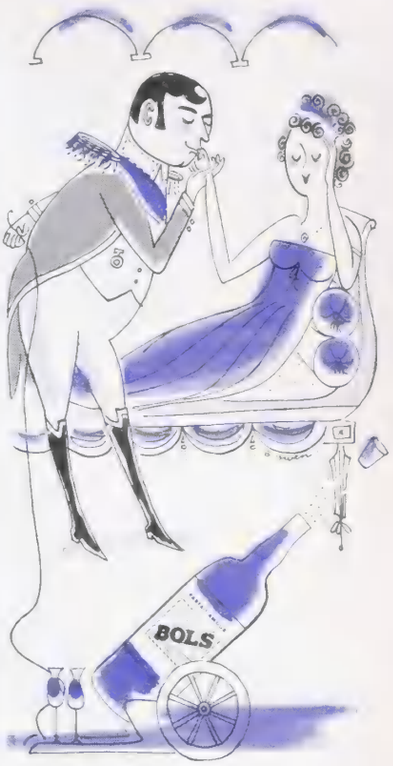
SEE ME!

and another in his dresser drawer, apparently ready for later use, reading: SKI NEWS EDITOR.

One morning, he told me that the reason he has so much trouble going to sleep at night is that he keeps imagining stories you just can't imagine any ending to, so he simply can't stop and go to sleep.

The next night, he was invited to ride to the station on an errand. He gave the matter some thought and then refused.

"You see," he explained, "if I went to the station and saw any of those new diesel trains, I might get interested in trains again, and I haven't time for that, because this week I'm interested in airplanes."



After we finished the last summer book, My Friend Flicka, I lay on the grass, enjoying the warm afternoon in the sunshine. The lake was very still, with the yellow and russet trees reflected in it. Crackle, the white puppy named for Mike's old puppet, came running through the dust and jumped up with all four feet off the ground in a funny leap of joy.

Startled, I sat up; and thoroughly awakened, looked all around me, drinking in all I could of this end of summer. Up on the slope toward the house, Mike was busy with something. He had cut armloads of the long, brown, seedy grass on the slope, tied it up in many small bundles like miniature sheaves of grain, and these he was scattering carefully over the hillside.

At last, too curious to keep still, I strolled over.

"What is that you're arranging so carefully?" I asked.

His big brown eyes glowed with anticipation. "Bait!" he whispered eagerly. "Bait! It's for catching a wild stallion!"

ELEVEN OUTDOOR GRILLS

veins to be controlled. For cooking over horizontal fire, a grid tilted in one of several ways carries droplets of fat away from the heat source into a separate pan. Six of the broilers shown cook meat in front of a vertical fire, eliminating the possibility of fat dripping onto the coals.

All eleven units permit the free movement of air while meat is being cooked. This improves the juiciness of the cooked meat.

All grills are easily and completely cleanable. There are no pockets or crevices that cannot be reached. All the grids are made of smooth materials. (No fatty residue should ever be allowed to remain on a grill where it will char and carbonize with subsequent fires, thus contaminating each new batch of meat.)

With a good fire that has no greasy smoke and the use of a thermometer so that cooking is done at low heat (the temperature where the meat lies should be kept under 325° F.), these grills share the necessary qualifications for cooking meat the HOUSE BEAUTIFUL way.

The color groups—blue, blue-green, yellow, peach-buff, pink, tan-brown, a warm gray, plus black and white—come in nine different kinds of tile. Colors within a group are related but deliberately not matched to each other. The slight differences in tile color and the finish add interest to monotone color schemes.

Shaped to Fit

The tiles also come in modular shapes—squares (and some rectangles) that are multiples of each other and can therefore be used together in combinations of different sizes as well as colors.

This means, for example, that in planning a bathroom you can have related colors on walls, counter top, and floor, each in tiles especially designed for its place and purpose. If you choose within the range of a color group your colors are sure to look well together. With care, you can mix colors from different groups to create bold effects or subdued, delicate schemes.

The pros and cons of wall-to-wall carpeting

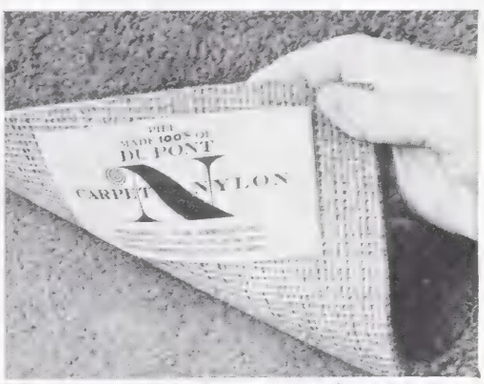
You may choose upholstery from an extensive collection of fine fabrics. This cocktail table comes in Cinnabar Red as well as the neutral Tokay finish.

Henredon's Pan Asian

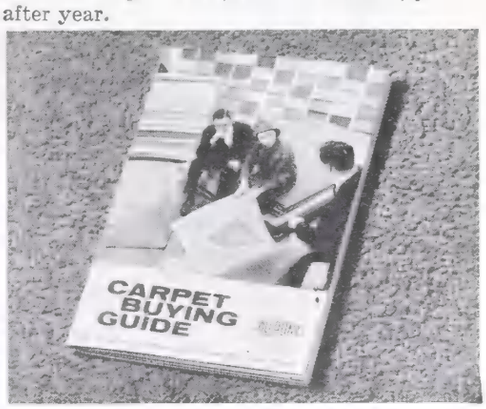
From the rich artistry of the East, Henredon has taken these light, graceful lines and unique decorative themes . . . blending them with the practical knowledge of the West. The result . . . Pan Asian . . . an exciting new concept in furniture!

You can see that this collection is not limited to exotic rooms. It is designed to go with any style home . . . individual pieces may be used to accent traditional or contemporary rooms. And because it is Henredon, you know Pan Asian will bring you the most advanced ideas in comfort, convenience and durable beauty.

Graceful oval table extends to 90 inches. Handsome carved doors on the chest hide roomy drawers, adjustable shelf. All Tokay finish. The chest also comes in Cinnabar Red and Malachite Green . . . a lovely accent piece for a living room or hall.



Only nylon gives you all these extras:



Outwears carpets of all other carpet fibers in similar constructions by at least 2 to 1. Don't let nylon's luxurious softness fool you —it's the strongest, toughest, longest-wearing fiber ever used in carpeting! And moths don't like nylon!

Even coffee stains can be sponged away with detergent and water. Nylon also proved to have greatest recovery from crushing when tested with carpets of all other carpet fibers. That means the heaviest furniture or countless footsteps won't leave lasting marks.

When you shop look for the Du Pont label— it's your assurance of the top performance and luxury of 100% Du Pont Carpet Nylon in quality carpets . . . means you're getting the best carpet value, dollar for dollar, year after year.

Du Pont's Carpet Buying Guide gives you the latest news on all types of carpeting... decorating hints, tips on care. Ask your carpet dealer or write, enclosing 10¢ to cover handling, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Textile Fibers, A-11047-B Wilmington 98, Del.

. . . presented by Armstrong — the one company that makes all kinds of vinyl floors, including some kinds that nobody else makes. This 8-page Guide is full of sensible facts and exciting decorating ideas to help you choose the vinyl floors that are best for your home.

MODERN VINYL FLOORS – what they are...where to use them... how much they cost...designs and colors...and everything else you need to know to choose the vinyl floor that's best for any room in your home.

Here's where you can find out all about vinyl floors. They're one of the most important decorating developments ever—and one of the biggest contributions ever made to easy home care. This Guide provides all the facts you need to make an intelligent selection of the vinyl floors best for you. Keep it handy for the day when you build or remodel—or just want a new floor.

Why vinyl is so perfect for floors

Vinyl—like nylon—is a modern man-made substance. Its qualities make it ideal for floors. Vinyl is beautifully smooth, extremely tough, and isn't harmed by grease, cleansers, perfumes and other things that get spilled around the home. The Armstrong research people have pioneered new ways to use these and other traits of vinyl to make vinyl floors extraordinarily practical and long wearing.

New designs and colorings

It's the unique looks of expertly designed vinyl floors that are causing the biggest stir—stimulating exciting new decorating ideas. Vinyl has an intrinsic beauty all its own: a subtlety, a mellowness, a patina. Its mood can be bright and gay, or quiet and unobtrusive. Vinyl can be crystal-clear or, with a touch of coloring, translucent. Add more coloring, and it becomes opaque. The Armstrong designers use vinyl in these different forms—and sometimes with glittering metallic particles, too—to give certain floors a real three-dimensional effect. It's fascinating.

What makes one vinyl floor different from another?

One difference is in how the vinyl is used. Another is the extent to which it is mixed with other substances. Price depends on the same considerations. Pure vinyl is very costly, so the higher the vinyl content, the more expensive the floor. Some Armstrong Vinyl Floors are made almost completely of pure vinyl. Naturally, they're the easiest to care for and the most luxurious looking. In some, the vinyl is mixed with other, less costly, materials to keep down price without too greatly compromising the decorative and practical advantages of vinyl. And sometimes a protective layer of vinyl is used to seal in the natural beauty of other non-vinyl materials such as cork. Armstrong makes every kind of vinyl floor. That's why we can tell you all about the different kinds—and why we don't have to play favorites.

How much care do vinyl floors really need?

All sorts of claims, such as "no scrubbing and no waxing," have been made for vinyl floors and floor coverings. But, in our opinion, vinyl floors do need occasional washing and waxing if you want them always to look their best. It's true that good-quality vinyl floors are easy to care for. They need less frequent waxing, for instance. And when they are waxed, only a very thin coat needs to be applied. Vinyl floors are very smooth, too. A quick damp mopping gets rid of surface dirt and dust. However, like any surface, the smoother or more mirror-like it is, the more likely you are to see accidental scratches when they catch the light.

Where to use vinyl floors

Your selection of vinyl floors will depend a great deal on the subfloor and the kind of room. The subfloor is the surface (wood, concrete, plywood) over which your new floor will be installed. When the subfloor is in the basement, it's below grade. When it's downstairs in a basementless (or slab-construction) house, it's on grade. And the subfloor is above grade if it's upstairs or over a basement or crawl space. Armstrong vinyl tiles can be installed anywhere—upstairs or down. Until recently you couldn't use sheet vinyl floors on grade or below grade. Now you can. Armstrong has developed a special backing, known as Hydrocord, for some styles of sheet vinyl Corlon, which makes them completely resistant to the alkaline moisture in concrete, on and below grade. As for the kind of room, only you can decide where you want to use vinyl floors. All Armstrong Vinyl Floors are perfect from both decorative and practical points of view for any room.

Sheet vinyl floors or vinyl tile?

Vinyl tile is preferred by do-it-yourselfers, because it's easy to handle. It also makes an excellent floor when it's installed by professional flooring craftsmen. When you consider a sheet vinyl floor, you'll find that one of its biggest advantages is that it can be put down with a minimum of seams. Because joints and seams make work for the housewife by catching dust and dirt, it's wise to avoid them if you can.

Do-it-yourself or professional installation?

Having the craftsman from your flooring store install your new floor gives you a number of advantages. First off, you're sure of a professional result. What's more, you can get custom effects that enhance the beauty of your floor and give your home a completely individual look. And the professional craftsman can join seams so skillfully they're virtually invisible—with no place for dust to hide. On the other hand, there are vinyl floors in this Guide that are specially made for the easiest possible do-it-yourself job.

Now—the matter of money

Vinyl floors vary in price. Some are downright inexpensive—Armstrong Excelon Tile, for instance, installed by a do-it-yourselfer in a 10′ x 15′ area, would cost only about $40.00. Some are frankly expensive—Armstrong Opalesq Vinyl Tile in that same 10′ x 15′ area, installed by a professional craftsman, might cost around $375.00. With each floor in this Guide, we've listed the approximate price for the floor installed in a 10′ x 15′ area. Various factors, such as room size and shape, the type and condition of your subfloor, custom work (if any), local labor rates, and so on, make it impossible to give exact price information for your specific rooms. To find out just how much it would cost to have a new Armstrong Vinyl Floor in any of your rooms, see a flooring dealer. He'll give you an estimate, at no obligation. Easy terms are usually available.

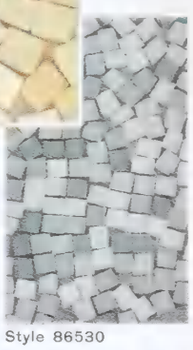
TESSERA CORLON



This Armstrong exclusive is the very latest development in sheet vinyl floors. Small, opaque vinyl chips "floating" in translucent vinyl give Tessera an intriguing three-dimensional appearance. You look deep down into the floor, instead of just at it. And you can actually feel the mosaic chips when you run your fingers over Tessera's surface. It comes in a variety of colorings —some monochromatic, some with accent chips in contrasting colors—and provides an elegant setting for traditional as well as modern furnishings. Because Tessera has the alkali-resistant Hydrocord Back, it can be used on grade and in basements, as well as above grade. In a 10′ x 15′ area, Tessera costs about $150.00 installed.*

Armstrong FUTURESQ CORLON

The picture below shows you how Futuresq Corlon—an Armstrong exclusive—unobtrusively gives a gay modern look to an entire room. Tiny metallic particles are permanently embedded right into the floor itself. So Futuresq will retain its enchanting glitter even under heavy daily wear. Although the surface looks fascinatingly textured, it is, in fact, satin-smooth and very easy to keep clean. Futuresq Corlon is made in a wonderful variety of colors and can be used in all above-grade rooms. It costs about $125.00, installed in a 10′ x 15′ area,* and is limited in its availability. Write us, and we'll be glad to tell you which dealers in your area have Futuresq.

The three stylings shown on this page are in the most popular and least expensive type of sheet vinyl floor, but they can be used only on subfloors that are above grade. Armstrong Vinyl Corlon comes in a wide variety of subtle designs and in many interesting colors. It's easy to choose the one that perfectly matches your decorative style. Sheet Vinyl Corlon gives you the added easy care only a virtually seamless floor provides. And it's not harmed by most of the things that get tracked in or spilled on floors around the house. Special custom design effects can be worked into your floor by the dealer's installation experts at little extra cost. They'll use Armstrong Decorator Inlays—vinyl strips and special shapes that will give your floors a completely individual look. Corlon installed in a 10′ x 15′ area costs about $100.00.*

Armstrong EXCELON TILE

There are all sorts of different brands of vinyl-asbestos tile available today. Some are better than others. Armstrong Excelon Tile has become a special favorite with do-it-yourselfers, because Excelon can be cut with scissors to fit snugly in corners and around pipes, and the adhesive is easy to apply with a brush. Of course, Excelon is a fine floor when it's installed by your dealer, too. Excelon Tile can be used anywhere in the home—including the basement. For its low cost, Excelon Tile is a long-wearing floor with a bright, glossy surface and unusual resistance to staining. And what decorative variety. You'll find in Armstrong Excelon Tile over 80 colors in 8 design effects. (A sampling of designs is shown.) Costs about $40.00 for a do-it-yourselfer to cover a 10′ x 15′ area.*

Armstrong CUSTOM CORLON TILE

Solid (or "homogeneous") vinyl tile is very much in vogue for its smart appearance and long wear. It can be used anywhere, even in basements. Armstrong Custom Corlon Tile was specially formulated to give several important exclusive advantages: It's guaranteed not to shrink or expand; it resists indentation from heavy furniture; it's exceptionally resistant to household chemicals; and cigarette burns are easily removed. Custom Corlon Tile comes in a choice of shapes and sizes, two subtly textured patterns, in many lustrous colors, as well as plain black and plain white. It costs about $180.00, installed in a 10′ x 15′ area.*

OPALESQ VINYL TILE

This is the vinyl tile that interior decorators love for giving prestige interiors extraordinary luxury and distinction. Opalesq Vinyl Tile has a three-dimensional effect, translucency, unusually deep colors, a hint of metallic glitter. Made almost completely of costly pure vinyl, Opalesq is very durable and easy to care for. It comes in a variety of high-fashion colors, in several shapes and sizes, and can be used above, on, and below grade. It costs about $375.00, installed in a 10′ x 15′ area.*

VINYL ACCOLON

This new, low-cost type of vinyl floor covering is becoming very popular. Because it's a printed material, it is entirely different from the vinyl floors in this Guide. Armstrong Vinyl Accolon is made by an exclusive method with several layers of vinyl and a new photoprinting process using vinyl inks. This provides exceptional depth of color, high gloss, and a long-wearing, easy-to-clean surface. Vinyl Accolon comes in many handsome designs; costs about $25 for a 10′ x 15′ area. It doesn't have to be pasted down (though it can be), so it's ideal if your landlord won't permit a new, permanent floor, or if you're moving soon.

you're planning a new home that will be larger than most, d have certain desirable features, you probably will be a t more comfortable with zone control heating. This means viding your home into two or more comfort zones, each th its own thermostat and heat supply. With such a system, u simply set either thermostat to fit your mood or activity. or example, you can have one section cool for sleeping ildren, another area warm, for entertaining.

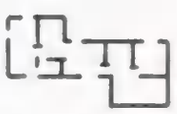
Comfort zoning can be accomplished in three ways: (1) o furnaces, each serving a separate comfort zone controlled its own thermostat (2) one furnace serving two or more nes, each with its own thermostat and (3) one boiler serving o or more zones by means of separate water valves or culators controlled by separate thermostats.

Although Honeywell does not make heating equipment, we make the world-famous controls that assure dependable, nomical performance. Most familiar is the Honeywell und thermostat, first choice of four out of five homeowners.

If your building plans include any of these desirable features, you may need 2 furnaces or 2 zones for complete heating comfort.

Large picture windows often mean greater heat gain or loss.

Spread-out floor plans cause wide temperature differences.



Finished basements or family rooms require tailored temperatures.

Rooms over garages often need extra heating or cooling.

Split-level homes are a puzzle for one thermostat to control.

Living and sleeping areas often require different temperatures.

See your heating dealer! Not all homes need zoning. Your heating contractor can give you expert, dependable advice. After studying your needs, he may recommend only one furnace; or one furnace with two or more zones, each having its own thermostat. For hot water systems, your dealer may advise one boiler with one, two, or more comfort zones and thermostats; in some cases, two small boilers. Whatever your needs, trust him on any question of heating or cooling.

creates the look of opulence

ARMSTRONG

Pure-Foam LATEX RUBBER

will keep it there!

Modern in proportion and mood, yet with the traditional elegance of diamond tufting and gently curved arms, this "Covey" suite is a product of the Fort Smith Couch Company, Fort Smith, Arkansas. This fine company, founded in 1897, cushions both pieces with Armstrong Pure-Foam — all latex rubber — to assure year after year of luxurious comfort and beauty.

TONE is one of the principal standards by which fine pianos are judged. Tone of Baldwin stature can be achieved only through use of the finest materials in the hands of dedicated craftsmen. For example, the patented Baldwin pinblock contains forty layers of select hardwood, so strong that the modern Baldwin Grand stays tuned as no piano ever did before. Admire it at your Baldwin Dealer's today.

Tone beauty

OF A GRAND!

It is no longer necessary to compromise performance with styling. The beautifully fashioned Everett offers concert fidelity of a grand and distortion-free volume that is more than adequate for today's home.

Concert Fidelity

STARTS AT THE BACK

Look at the back of an Everett. "Posts" are iron instead of wood. These exclusive iron levers permit the string tension of a grand piano. Concert fidelity that has won the favor of thousands of professional pianists!

Decorator's Diary

I can't figure out why so many people seem afraid of decorators, as if they were a peculiarly strong-minded genus who invariably contrive to have things their way. We're almost like hotel-keepers in that the client must always be right—eventually.

I am reminded of Ralph Lindquist, an esoteric young bachelor who has collected and written reams about Etruscan ceramics and, despite his superior sense of design, called upon me to help him assemble his possessions in a three-room apartment. Even the foyer is lined with specially lighted shelves to set forth his treasured ceramic collection to best advantage. Since most of his cache is bucchero—that ancient black pottery that is the essence of simple, graceful line—off-white walls, black vinyl floors, and off-white Moroccan rugs seemed appropriate to me, with mimosa-yellow draperies and semi-sheer wool curtaining—hand-loomed, of course, because he's insistent upon the handcrafted, and yellow because the living room faces due north.

Upholstery is henna, burnt orange, and gold. Lamp tables are black lacquer and the elliptical coffee table is gray-streaked white marble. And it was just as simple as it sounds to sell this scheme to my persnickety young friend.

Then it was light

Until we came to the room lighting. Impetuously I had pursued the idea of dropping the ceiling, the way they do in some factory offices, sheathing the whole area with translucent vinyl sheets, and transforming the ceiling into one vast spread of diffused light. But here I came a cropper.

"This is my home, not a spa plug factory," said Mr. Lindqu coolly handing me back my cei blueprints. "What I was hop was that you could find me s light fixtures in ceramic, someth that relates to my interests bes doing a very good, decorative li ing job."

Ceramic lampshade

I fled, but didn't have to far. For I had remembered Lil Ross and her provocative showroom, Creative Art for In try, which features, among m other things, Italian ceran and glass. One foot in the d one glance at the hall lighting ture, and I found exactly wha was there for—a hanging li shade of off-white, unglazed ramic, 10" in diameter and deep, its outside surface " alled" with openwork flanges wh cast a pretty flicker of light walls and floor. It's open at bottom to cast direct light to floor and its inner glaze is a b liant yellow that gives the ligh subtle quality of subdued sunsh And it's handmade in Italy, what more could Mr. Lindq want? Indeed, I thought, w more could Mrs. Morgan w whose foyer needs an entry l fixture, or Mrs. Beckwith, w been bedeviling me for six mon to find a cluster of hanging lig to illuminate her dining table?

They are lightweight, as eas wash as a dinner plate and, ha ing from the ceiling in a clu of varying heights, look so and create such comment in Lindquist's living room he act if he found them.—M. G.

. . . Free Catalog Ends Search

After years of "looking", Mrs. B. Billow, 538 Roscoe, Chicago, solved a problem. A free catalog ended her search for practical, full-time protection for her furniture from dust, dirt. Now her furniture is dressed up in shaped-to-fit Window-Clear Plastic Covers that protect without hiding the beautiful upholstery. The extra-heavy plastic has no pores to admit dust and dirt. Gives perfect protection; saves work. So transparent every detail of pattern and color shows through. Amazed by their custom-tailored appearance, Mrs. Billow says, "They're so good-looking, I leave them on for company. Ordering was easy and they're inexpensive, too. Housewives with the same problem should get your free catalog, as I did." Write today for FREE Catalog of over 150 styles and sizes, including latest SECTIONAL and BUMPER models.

from coast to coast in America's finest residential areas you see more DAY-n-NIGHT Markers than any other kind of house marker

People who can afford any type of home identification choose low-cost DAY-n-NIGHT Markers. Good taste, simple design and honest craftsmanship have made DAY-n-NIGHT Markers America's favorites from coast to coast!

The perfect gift for birthdays—or any occasion—because it's personal! Gift card free on request.

ANY WORDING YOU WANT*

Your name or other wording appears on both sides of your DAY-n-NIGHT Marker in permanent, embossed reflector letters that shine brightly in headlights, softly in moonlight.

DAY-n-NIGHT Markers are rustproof; plates, frames, etc., are made of lifetime aluminum throughout. Baked enamel automobile finish; black background, white letters. The letters are permanent — raised in solid aluminum plates. Nameplates are 2½" x 18"; number plates are 2½" x 7".

You can order any wording you want, up to 17 letters and numbers on nameplates, 6 on number plates. Same wording appears on both sides.

COLOR! The background on any DAY-n-NIGHT Marker can be made in your choice of Antique Copper, Colonial Red or Pine Green for only 50¢ per Marker extra. The colors are baked enamel automobile finishes, with the same brilliant white reflecting letters as black-and-white styles.

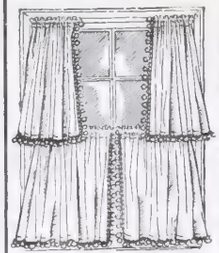
Do You Make these Mistakes in ENGLISH?



MANY persons say "between you and I" instead of "between you and me"—or use "who" for "whom" or don't know whether to spell certain words with one or two "e's" or "m's" or "r's" or with "ie" or "ei", etc. Mistakes in English reveal lack of education, refinement—prevent you from presenting your thoughts in strongest way. Real command of English will help you reach any business or social goal.

Everyone's MOVING UP to Cedar!

Home buyers, today, are moving up to homes designed with taste and built with quality. That's why Western Red Cedar is so widely used in the better new communities. A triple-thick roof of natural cedar shingles withstands the ravages of sun, wind and storm—beautifully—for scores of maintenance-free years. Cedar shake walls—richly textured and tastefully factory-colored—are applied two layers thick to combine dramatic horizontal shadowlines with extremely effective insulation. Look for the builders in your community featuring genuine cedar roofs and walls. They are building homes you can move up to with pride and confidence.

TERRACE LIGHTS throw a heavenly glow when you're dining in or out-of-doors. A stunning coin-dotted glass, 5" high, with a pink, blue, orange, or lime tinted wax candle burns over 50 hours. After hand-poured candle is used, fill the glass with candy or cocktail crackers. $6.75 ea. $12 a pair. Add 50¢ post. Candle refills. $3 each. Carol Palmer, 67-38 108th St., Forest Hills 75, N.Y.

FRENCH LEMON HOLDER is easy pickings for the woman in the kitchen, the man behind the bar. An antique green metal rack, copy of an old design, hangs on the wall and permits air to circulate around lemons. They're tastier, juicier, longer lasting than if stored in the refrigerator. Rack for 6 lemons, $3. Add 50¢ w. of Rockies. Mears Mfg. Co., West Rd., Litchfield, Conn.

A HOT PLATE can ruin a table surface but a supply of trivets on hand will prevent such accidents. A silver-plated trivet has a pretty, chased design, stands on four ball feet. It measures about 6" in diameter and makes a useful housewarming or wedding present. $3. S. M. Briggin, 131 W. Maple Drive, New Hyde Park, L.I., New York.

BE PROUD OF YOUR JEWELS and keep them as glitteringly beautiful as the day you got them. n't this what you'd like do about that bedroom?

Go ahead, touch the wood. Weldwood paneling is so beautiful you can't help running a hand over it. This is the one paneling that's finished in 12 steps—to make it as beautiful as fine Chippendale. You can actually feel the difference.

might have been an ordinary bedroom. new Weldwood real wood paneling Charter Birch has helped transform a room a growing daughter can't help g. It's exciting—and unlike any other because nature never grows wood ame way twice.

n't you have a room you'd like to ken? In a Weldwood setting, you can frilly or as formal as you like. Real adds warmth to modern furniture, new freshness to period furniture. To e any qualms about money, please that a 12′ x 8′ wall costs as little as $52. And Weldwood is guaranteed to outlive your home. Never needs redecorating, although you can change companion colors as often as you like.

But not even the finest photograph can do justice to Weldwood's 70 or more different panelings. See them in person at your lumber dealer's or at one of the 119 Weldwood branch showrooms across the United States and Canada. Think about it. Haven't you a room that needs awakening?

DESIGNED BY JOHN AND EARLINE BRICE

Now showing—new "Collector's Group" of Cabin Crafts rugs

Students of art—from eight to eighty—think these designs are worthy of a museum. But we think fine art belongs in the home. On the floor with Cabin Crafts rugs. They look like one-of-a-kind originals. There's nothing run-of-the-mill about the colors either. They might have been mixed specially to your order. An amazing thing happens when you buy one of these rugs. Your whole room suddenly looks custom decorated. Clockwise from bottom: Acrilan® "New Horizons" oval, 3′ x 6′ 6″, $44.95. Acrilan "Parfait Tones", 6′ x 9′, $99.95. Cotton "Sahara", 3′ x 6′ 6″, $29.50. Spunvis and cotton "Marimba", 4′ x 4′, $19.50. Acrilan "New Motif", 3′ x 5′, $34.95. Danish rollers, used to print fine wallpapers, are made available for lamp bases by this kit. No two are alike, but you have generic choice of floral, geometric, or abstract patterns. Everything needed to complete lamp base is supplied; base and harp are solid brass; printing "teeth" on roller itself are brass. An easily assembled project. Total height 35". $25 for kit, from D. M. Studner, 505 Eighth Ave., New York, N.Y.

Before storing a mowing machine for the winter, sharpen its blades to truly clean them. An easy way, done without blade removal, is supplied by Sharpee attachment for ¼" electric drills. A guide maintains correct sharpening angle even over bad nicks. Grinding is fast, uniform, accurate. The wheel, petrified aluminum oxide, gives long service. For any rotary mower-blade, $2.98. Mower-Mate Co., Riverton, Kansas.

Plastic forms this modern rolling pin, a fine Davis implement that turns on ball bearings. Celanese Fortiflex used for both roller and handles, withstands machine-washing or boiling water without warping or deteriorating. Nothing short of real abuse will rack or dent the hard, smooth structure. White, yellow, or pink, with black tips; chromed-metal roller ends. Decorative and practical. $1.98; from Macy's, New York, N.Y.

A new concept in light source, the electroluminescent cell, is brought into home use for the first time. It is Westinghouse Rayescent Safety Light, a tiny glass panel framed with plastic. It gives luminous, greenish glow, glare-free and heat-free. Just plug unit into conventional convenience outlet for use; operating for 24 hours a day per year costs under a penny. Unit is $1.29; from Wanamaker's, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Tidy-Maid trays organize drawer contents and make it easy to maintain neat order. Elasticized ruffling of nylon-organdy keeps each stack intact; trays with contents leave the drawer as one for easy selection. Very handy for travel; ideal in linen closet for hard-to-store oddments. Trays, encased in white plastic, have sachet pocket; $4.95 a set (1, 11" x 16"; 2, 11" x 11"). From Jomarco, 283 Lyons Ave., Newark, N.J.

COLOR that stays fresh and vibrant because this carpet is made of Textured
you from Croft's "Resort Collection" now in a fabulous range of decorator custom colors.

Carpet of Textured Caprolan will not fuzz or shed. It's easy to clean, too, and keeps lively texture for years. In fact, it's unexcelled for wearability and is certified performance. (Allied makes the Caprolan fiber—not the carpet.)

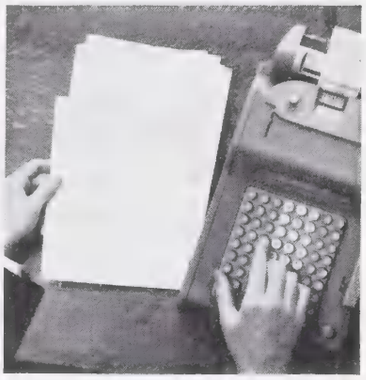
1000 housewives test electric dishwashing compounds, vote New Instant Calgonite® best



January, 1958. 1,007 dishwasher owners in 45 states selected for year-long test.

Each receives dishwasher compounds with plain numbered labels to prevent brand identification.

Results of each test—cleaning power, stain removal, dissolving action, water conditioning power, freedom from spots—are carefully recorded.

November, 1958—test over. Results show one detergent has consistently outperformed all other brands. That one was New Instant Calgonite.

NEW INSTANT CALGONITE IS IN THE STORES NOW

Famous dishwasher makers also tested, approved, and now recommend NEW INSTANT calgonite for spotless cleaning, stain removal and instant dissolving action.

Suction sweeping swoops up scrub-water or suds when Wet-Vac and your electric vacuum-cleaner are attached. The same work-free procedure removes foam shampoo and residual fiber dampness from carpeting or upholstery. Suction feed from vacuum cleaner into Wet-Vac tank for collecting liquid substances is engineered to make impossible the entry of moisture into vacuum cleaner unit. This useful Vacu-Flo innovation, $34.95, attaches to any type of vacuum cleaner.

Thermostatic water-mixer for the shower, Powers Hydroguard, automatically dials desired water temperature; also maintains it without fluctuation. Automatic safety devices prevent water flow exceeding 110° and stop shower flow if cold-water supply goes off. Deluxe in every detail; applicable to exposed or concealed piping. Uninstalled, from $60. A new model is engineered for use where water-heater is low in storage or heat capacity; also it effects water conservation with small shower head. Uninstalled, about $60.

You sit on foam and you love it...now sleep on foam

Just make sure it's U.S. KOYLON the platinum label in foam mattresses

For the same reason you love to relax on that big foam chair and catnap on that foam sofa of yours, you'll also love sleeping on foam. Magical foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them the way conventional mattresses do. But you should know that not all foam makes equally good mattresses. Shun cheap foam like the plague. Better yet, specify U. S. Koylon,® finest of all foams. Uniquely constructed small core, double-core Koylon gives a totally new kind of gentle but firm straight-line support to every weary inch of you. It assures lasting firmness and much better ventilation. Non-allergenic Koylon is cleaner, cooler, fresher the year 'round. Of course it costs more to make foam mattresses this way, but it's worth it, as you'll soon discover in the world's most luxurious sleep. Prices for twin-size Koylon mattress and matching boxspring start at 129.50.

The old sleep: Ordinary mattresses resist the contours of your body, make it hard to relax, keep muscles tense supporting your weight. Sagging springs, rigid metal stuffings disturb sleep.

The new sleep: Double-core U. S. Koylon Foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them. Every inch of you gets firm straight-line support. And you relax all over in luxurious sleep.

What should you expect from rugs and carpets?

● From bearskins to broadloom, there have always been carpetlike coverings on the floors of human dwellings. For it seems to be instinctive to provide oneself with the soft underfooting and feeling of warmth that floor covering gives its surroundings.

But HOUSE BEAUTIFUL believes you can expect much, much more than this of the rugs and carpets in your home. They are often major investments in money, but they are also major investments in optical illusion. They can make small areas look spacious, or they can zone large space into intimate sections. Best of all, we see them as creators of serenity in a world that can stand a lot more physical and emotional calm. Quieters of noise, buffers against unnerving clatter, they can also refresh the eye and spirit, giving a home and the people in it a sense of stability and coherence.

In this issue, we explore the manifold benefits HOUSE BEAUTIFUL believes you can expect of rugs and carpets, and ways to achieve them.

A look of integration and continuity is achieved by carpeting this living area in the same color as the terrazzo floor of the adjoining lanai. Designed by James Merrick Smith and James M. Willis, decorators, for the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Hamilton Crawford.

If you think of the room as a whole when you choose rugs and carpets, they will do much more than just cover a floor

To the eye, a floor covering is inseparable from the floor itself, and if you think of a room's four walls, ceiling, and floor as a cube, you realize that the base called the floor is an integral part of the whole. It must be treated as part of the whole if a room is to have that feeling of totality which makes it visually and emotionally pleasing.

How do you relate a rug to a room as a whole? Most people make at least a start at it by attempting to relate a rug's color or pattern to those used in walls and fabrics. But there is much more to be considered. You must think of pattern in broader terms. Every room, for instance, has its own architectural pattern, created by such protrusions and indentations as jogs, ells, window and door openings, alcoves, chimney walls. The very furniture itself adds pattern which is formed by the legs of chairs and tables, or the round, square, rectangular or oval shapes of (Please turn the page)

What's the difference between a rug and a carpet?

For convenience these two words are often used interchangeably. Technically they haven't the same meaning.

A rug is a floor covering made in one piece, often with its own delineating border, and usually not intended to cover an entire floor area.

A carpet is floor covering made in strips, intended to cover an entire floor and is often attached to the floor. Carpet is woven in widths from 27" to 18', wide widths being known as broadloom. Strips can be seamed or taped together and thus cover great areas. A piece of carpet can, of course, be used as a rug.

A room-size rug is one that comes to within a foot or so of the edge of a room, leaving a marginal strip of floor exposed. Nine by twelve is a common size, but there are standard sizes as large as 12' x 15'.

An area rug is one that does not cover the entire floor but is usually used to define an area of a room according to its function. Most frequently an area rug is small or middle-size, but its size is comparative, depending upon that of a room. In a great room a 12' x 15' might be considered an area rug.

An accent rug is one bold in color or design, or both, usually of small or medium size, and used to create a dominant note in an otherwise muted or solid-colored room. It might also be used as an area rug.

An art rug is generally hand-crafted and fine enough to be treated as a work of art. Often it is placed so furniture does not encroach upon it, so it may be admired like a picture on the floor. Usually patterned, it may be modern or traditional, such as a fine oriental or an 18th-century needlepoint. Try making one yourself.

The key to perfection in design is thoughtful planning. e consideration of every detail. Each element must be ated with importance but conceived as part of the whole. unified whole, even though it has parts that are stimuing to the eye, gives you a feeling of calm completeness. Floor coverings can often be used to carry a motif inteated with the total design of the room. But since the ors are such an important part of your room, you must especially careful in using strong elements on rugs and rpets. The choice of a motif, its size, and its placement relation to furnishings, usually require professional skill.

rea rugs can subdivide your room according to function, stablish backgrounds for furniture groupings,

nd define traffic patterns through the room

● There was a day—and we are happy to say that it's gone by—when rugs were strewn about the floor with artful abandon in an attempt to produce an effect of affluence. Beauty, it was said, was their excuse for being and, if they had a function, it was scarcely more than the covering of a worn spot in the varnish.

Today, smaller-than-room-size rugs have come into their own as area rugs. They are being used increasingly as functional and integral parts of the room. At the same time, full advantage is being taken of their appearance, since they are set off against the floor to show up as importantly as possible. Their primary purpose, however, is to divide the room according to its activities, such as conversation groups, traffic lanes, work or dining areas.

There are other advantages. You can easily re-arrange them, for one thing, so your decorative scheme can be revised when the fancy strikes you. Color schemes can be altered quite simply (after all, a small rug can be replaced without breaking the budget). They are easy to clean and can be turned to minimize tracking. And even with a single area rug, you have an appealing visual contrast between the surfaces of floor and rug. (Usually contrasts in depth of tone should be slight except in large rooms. Small rooms look larger if floor and rugs are nearly the same shade.) With more than one rug, many subtle variations in shape, size, texture, pattern and color are possible.

RUGS CAN BE ROOM DIVIDERS

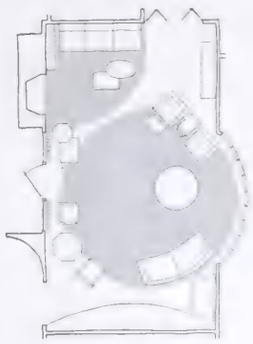
Even when they are used to divide a room, area rugs can integrate and unify it



The use of area rugs calls for careful planning since their effects are architectural as well as decorative. As we have said, the room must be considered as a whole. Although your first concern is the creation of a pleasing design on the floor that will function as a room-divider, this design must integrate with all the other architectural elements of the room.

To achieve a composition of rug (or rugs) and floor that is pleasing to the eye, you must keep both surfaces in mind. The shape of the floor around the rug is as important as the shape of the rug itself—and sometimes even more so. There is no law that prescribes rectangles. You can use circles or any other shapes that define an area best. But be cautious of free-form or fried-egg shapes. If you must have them, let a competent decorator plan them. Forms should never be startling just for the sake of being "modern." They must be the logical outgrowth of function, not a superimposed stylistic trick or an "amusing" fad that will (Please turn to page 197)

OTOGRAPHED AT BLOOMINGDALE'S BY HOWARD GRAFF

● Wall-to-wall carpeting was once the style mark of the luxury home. This is obviously no longer true, since some development builders include carpeting with the price of their houses. In fact, wall-to-wall carpeting has become such a cliché in some circles that people arbitrarily dismiss it as being "out of style."

This argument over style should not obscure the fact that wall-to-wall carpeting has some very real advantages—and some very real problems. It is these down-to-earth facts that should influence your decision, not the vagaries of a style trend.

Wall-to-wall carpeting means a floor covering cut to fit the exact dimensions of a room or rooms and permanently installed by tacking or other methods. From this simple definition come its major advantages and disadvantages. Because it covers every inch of the floor, it eliminates the margin around the rug—an extra pattern element you may not want (more about pattern problems, page 111). Thus it brings a unity and continuity—a sense of quiet—to the room or rooms that it covers. At the same time its single color and texture make the space look larger.

On the other hand, being permanently installed, it cannot easily be taken up for cleaning (though it is occasionally done—see below). On-the-floor cleaning, of course, is never 100% successful. And being cut to the particular (Please turn the page)

THE PROS AND CONS

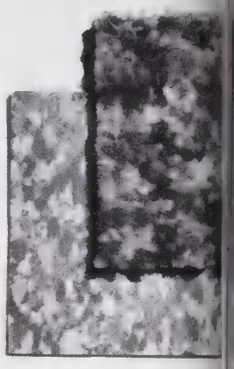
jogs and angles of a room, it cannot be turned to equalize the worn spots created by traffic patterns or occasional fading in sunlit areas.

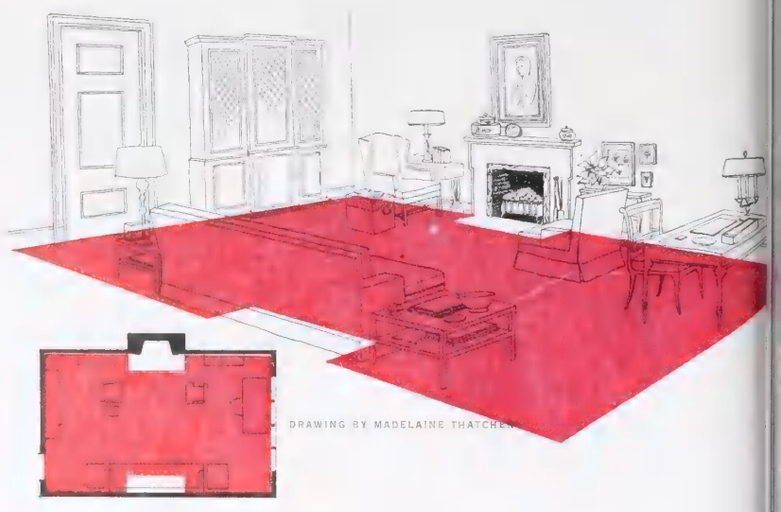
These are the major arguments and your decision will almost certainly be reached by balancing one against the other. If you have small rooms, already cut up by halls and jogs, you may well decide to accept the disadvantages to achieve the unity over-all carpeting will bring. If your rooms are larger, with a built-in serenity of their own, you may want to use room-size or area rugs to achieve other purposes.

Special factors can become important in individual situations. With small children in a house, wall-to-wall carpeting does make the floor warmer for play, and falls are cushioned. Firmly installed carpetings are a bit safer, too, since they cannot slip and there are no rug edges to trip over. Carpeting, like draperies and other soft materials, cuts down on sounds reflected within a room and so produces a quieter atmosphere. However, if you plan to move eventually, you must remember that carpeting can rarely be put to the same use in another situation—the best you can usually get are some pieces cut and bound, to be used as rugs.



It is hard, if not impossible, to compare the cost of room-size rugs with wall-to-wall carpeting. Both come in such a variety of patterns, fibers, and textures that material at both ends of the price scale is available. The installation cost of wall-to-wall carpeting normally makes it more expensive than the same material cut and bound as a rug. But since wall-to-wall carpets are often used to cover floors in poor condition, the cost of refinishing the floor is saved. This may equalize the price.

The fact that a wall-to-wall carpet is rigidly fixed in position is its biggest disadvantage and deserves further discussion. Cleaning a carpet thoroughly when it remains on the floor is the first problem. Though home methods have improved (see our story on pages 126-127) and professional on-the-floor cleaners can do even better, the truth is that neither of these techniques can equal the cleaning a rug gets when it is sent out to a modern plant. Nor is the floor underneath ever cleaned if the carpet is kept in position.



Thus, it is best if wall-to-wall carpets are actually untacked and sent out the way other rugs are. However, this raises an additional problem—shrinkage. A small percent of shrinkage does not matter with a room-size or area rug, but even an inch or two can make a wall-to-wall carpet difficult, if not impossible, to re-lay. Some carpeting is pre-shrunk to avoid this (Please turn to page 206)

PHOTOGRAPH BY WESLEY

Here is an optical trick that gives the illusion of wall-to-wall carpeting. An over-all texture blends rug and tile into a single surface. The rug, in a mottled design of blues, greens and beiges, covers all but a three-inch strip of the tile, which has a spattered pattern of similar colors. Rug can easily be taken up for cleaning or for a cool summer floor of tile alone.

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHE

Tracking can best be minimized by turning your carpet. In a t tangular room this can be accomplished by using carpet that almost but not quite to the wall. Even though a notch must be for hearth, the carpet can still be turned, if the notch is too far off center and if a large enough piece of furniture (su as a couch) is placed facing it. Piece cut out for hearth can taped into place when carpet is turned, won't show under furniture. Regular wall-to-wall can be turned in the same w

The wall-to-wall look in a bordered rug—the "border" being a narrow strip of bare flooring. The bold stripe of the rug, subtly repeated in the fabrics of the room, is a good foil for such a strong border, which becomes only a bolder repeat of the stripe. This rug can be taken up for cleaning or a change of pace in summer. Reginald Rose apartment; Barnett Simons, decorator.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE SMALL

Wall-to-wall is a point of view

To the eye there is often very little difference between wall-to-wall and almost-to-the-wall carpeting. The narrow border of flooring can be used in pleasing contrast to the carpet or can be matched in color (or even in texture and pattern) so as to be completely inconspicuous. Tiles offer many possibilities for matching. Woods can sometimes be stained or bleached to carpet tone. The advantages you get are many. You can take up the carpet for summer, roll it back for thorough house cleaning, send it out to the cleaners without fear of shrinkage. If rumpling or shifting is a problem, a good underlay will help anchor it as firmly as possible.

How to Preserve that fresh neu

By NANCY CRAIG

● Proper care is as closely related to the beauty and durability of floor coverings as their basic structure. Their greatest enemy is dirt, most of which home cleaning methods can get rid of, as long as it remains on or near the surface. Once it has worked its way deep into the pile, however, it is beyond reach of all but a professional rug cleaner.

The key to the problem is to eliminate dirt and dust as quickly as they appear. The amount involved may surprise you. A research study completed last year, covering large cities across the country, revealed that approximately 108 pounds of dirt are carried into the average six-room house during any given 12-month period. More than 80 per cent of this eventually reaches floors and their coverings. Only a regular cleaning schedule can successfully combat this amount of dirt.

That daily once-over-lightly with carpet sweeper, electric broom, or vacuum cleaner provides an easy way to dispose of loose dirt, lint, and thread. Thorough vacuuming at least once—preferably twice—a week, not only brushes and freshens carpeting, but helps prevent gritty dirt from sifting down through the tufts. Permitted to reach the base of a rug, grit acts like tiny chopping knives, cutting at the fibers and the backing. Thorough vacuuming on a regular schedule can prevent this. You cannot over-vacuum rugs and carpets. Occasionally check your cleaner to make certain that all the surfaces which touch floor coverings are smooth and free of nicks, so that fibers cannot be snagged and broken.

However conscientious you may be about vacuuming, soiled areas will develop from time to time. Smudge, greasy film, soot, and other surface soil usually show up along patterns of traffic. As long as soil has not become too deeply imbedded, such areas can be surface-cleaned or brightened with a good rug cleaner. Remember to use a light hand or you may distort the pile, making such areas more noticeable after cleaning than before.

In addition to area cleaning, all-over surface cleaning every six months will greatly improve the appearance of rugs and carpets and extend the period between professional cleanings. (Please turn to page 168)

First aid for Spots and Stains

A handy pin-up chart for emergency reference

Many common spots and stains are easy to remove when still fresh, but quick action is important. The following chart lists such stains as can be dealt with at home, using three formulas that you can mix with everyday household supplies. (The First Aid Kit for Carpets, put out by Servicemaster, has ready-to-use formulas.) All are approved by the National Institute of Rug Cleaning. These formulas may not always remove spots completely, but they will not set them permanently. Most stains not listed in the chart require the specialized skill of a professional rug cleaner.

General directions: Keep white facial tissues, paper towels, clean white unstarched cloths, and a medicine dropper handy. Solids should be scraped off with a dull knife or spatula. Unless otherwise specified, use a minimum of fresh lukewarm water whenever water is called for. Absorb as much of the spill as possible with tissues or towels before beginning any treatment. Start treatment at outer edges of the stained area and gradually work to the center. (Working from center out may enlarge the stain.) Use the medicine dropper to apply recommended solution directly to the stain. Blot the stained area when using Formula No. 1 or 2, but never rub or brush vigorously for this tends to fuzz or mat the pile. If a stain is to respond, it will do so without harsh rubbing. Never use so much of any formula that it will seep through to the base. Even water reaching the backing may cause a brown stain. Never use ammonia unless specifically recommended.

look in your rugs and carpets

COMMON STAINS AND HOW TO REMOVE THEM

Beverages (alcohol. coffee. tea. soft drinks): Moisten with wet cloth and blot. Repeat several times. Then use Formula 1. If necessary, follow with Formula 2.

Blood: Blot thoroughly. Then sponge repeatedly with cool water. Blot again and use Formula 1. If yellowish stain remains. better call your professional rug cleaner.

Butter, fats, grease, and oil: Blot thoroughly (do not rub) with tissues. Dampen cloth with Formula 3 and wipe spot from edge to center.

Chewing gum: Apply Formula 3 on and around the gum. Let stay 3 to 4 minutes. Lift off gum with spatula. If not loosened. repeat.

Cosmetics: Apply Formula 3. then Formula 1.

Egg, gelatin, mucilage: Apply Formula 1. If stain remains. apply Formula 2. Sponge with water and blot.

Foodstuffs (general): Scrape off solids. Sponge with water. Apply Formula 1. If stain remains when dry. apply a few drops of Formula 3 with dropper.

Fruits and fruit juices: Sponge lightly with damp cloth. Follow with Formula 1.

Furniture stains: Spots from wood dyes and stains from furniture legs are difficult to remove. Consult professional rug cleaner.

Ice cream, milk, desserts: Sponge with water. Follow with Formula 1.

Ink: An ink stain is easily extended over a large area of carpet. Unless stain is small. do not try to remove it. Never use milk; it may only set stain. For small stain. blot and then saturate with Formula 3. blotting up immediately. Repeat procedure as long as tissues show evidence of stain. Follow with few drops of Formula 1. blotting immediately. Repeat this procedure several times. If stain remains. consult professional rug cleaner. For ballpoint ink stains use Formula 3.

Iodine: Apply a few drops of white vinegar to stain. Mix 1 teaspoon of hypo crystals (from drug store) with glass of warm water. Apply this a drop or two at a time and carefully sponge with cloth. Repeat if necessary. Follow by sponging with water. blotting remaining moisture.

Medicine (general): Sponge with wet cloth. Apply one drop of Formula 1 to stain and immediately blot with cloth. If any stain transfers to cloth. continue with Formula 1. If not. try same procedure with Formula 2. If stain does not respond. inquire of physician or druggist the chemical contents of medicine and call professional rug cleaner.

Mercurochrome: Stains can seldom be removed. Consult professional rug cleaner.

Nail polish, household cement, dope: Such products may damage rugs or carpets made of synthetic fibers or blends. Home treatments with agents such as nail-polish remover or thinner. may also be damaging. Apply chemically pure amyl acetate directly to stain with eye dropper. After a few minutes. sponge with clean cloth.

Paint, varnish, or shellac: On small stains apply turpentine or thinner as recommended on the can. Sponge from edge toward center of stain. Follow by applying Formula 3.

Pet accidents: Such stains are among the most serious. as fibers and dyes are often sensitive to strong alkaline solutions and will undergo change in color as spot dries. Immediate treatment is most important. Blot thoroughly. then repeatedly sponge areas with water. and blot. Apply Formula 2. and allow to dry thoroughly. Apply Formula 1. When this has dried. follow again with Formula 2. Where color change has taken place. no further treatment can restore it.

Rust: Removal is no job for an amateur. Call a professional rug cleaner.

Shoe polish: If paste polish. scrape off surface soil. Apply Formula 3 with eye dropper and blot with cloth. Repeat as long as stain is transferred to cloth. If not completely successful. follow with Formula 1.

"Sweet" stains (candy. chocolate. sugar): Scrape off surface soil. Sponge with wet cloth. Follow with Formula 1.

Wax: Scrape off as much as possible. Apply Formula 3. and sponge with cloth.

"Mystery" stains: Trying to remove an unknown stain may set it and make it impossible even for a professional rug cleaner to remove.

Dark and light floors have almost completely opposite emotional and visual effects

colors have unexpected virtues

They can act as tranquilizers, giving your room an air of restful calm. But amazingly, they are surprisingly practical. They can also be an effective background for your furnishings.

● Dark floors or light? The difference between the two may be surprising, as the pictures on the opposite page graphically illustrate. The contrast in mood can be almost as great as the contrast in tone. Pale colors suggest limitless horizons. They open a room, giving it a sense of air and light, and thus of greater space. Dark colors, conversely, seem to shrink space, making large rooms appear smaller. Light floors also have the entirely physical advantage of reflecting light, creating a measurable glow that softens harsh shadows and lessens eye strain.

But this is not the only practical consideration. If you have ever brushed a smudge of dust from a navy blue suit, you are well aware that dust and dirt show up strongly on dark surfaces. Dark floor coverings are no exception. They can be handsome, but they can also require constant housekeeping. On the other hand, light tones (especially of neutral colors) often have an astonishing ability to camouflage dust marks. (We are not suggesting that dust and dirt be allowed to stay on your rugs or carpets for any length of time.) A foot print that would show up like a beacon on a deep color may be (Please turn the page) barely discernible on a light olive, beige, tan, or even an off-white. With texture or pattern added, these benefits are multiplied. But textures and patterns must be muted or the tranquilizing effects of the light color will be dissipated. If used discreetly, they can add visual interest and still form a self-effacing background for the furnishings of your room.

To illustrate the practical qualities of light colors we took dirt vacuumed from a typical floor and tracked it across carpet samples in several different colors and patterns. The dusty footprints show up just as clearly on the deep colors (see the one at the bottom of the photograph) as on the dead white paper background. Dust stands out least on neutral colors that have some texture, such as the one at center.

Pale carpeting emphasizes the dark silhouettes of antique mahogany table and chairs. The quiet floor does not compete with the furnishings or the Chinese paper on the wall. Home of Mr. and Mrs. James G. Stahlman; Elizabeth Peacock, decorator.

A soft light background is always desirable when your furnishings or architecture are important or arresting in design. Dark woods, complicated shapes, intricate detail are given special emphasis when silhouetted against a light floor covering. And if your furnishings are strongly patterned, the soothing tranquility of a plain floor is a welcome contrast. One of the less important but delightful qualities of the light floor is the way in which furniture shadows (especially those of intricate shape) are revealed, producing subtle new patterns of their own.

Light, neutral colors make perfect settings for your furnishings, but they need not lack interest as these samples clearly demonstrate Life-size swatches of neutral colors that can serve as backgrounds for almost any color scheme. High-low weaves give interesting textures. These samples are typical of floor coverings available today.

Like a rippled beach of golden sand, this floor lends an air of peaceful harmony to the bedroom. The hand-carved rug has a central motif called "Japanese Cloud." Sculptured surfaces such as this have a luxurious sense of depth and richness. At the same time, they have the practical advantage of disguising footprints.

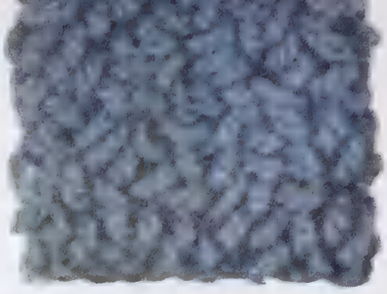
The opulent pattern of an Oriental rug keys the color scheme of this L-shaped living-dining room. It dominates the room and defines the conversation group—its largest and most important area. The nearby desk rug picks up the quiet beige of its background, a unifying color note throughout the room. The bolder color of the orange can be repeated in the circular dining rug, since it is set apart from the living area of a spacious room.

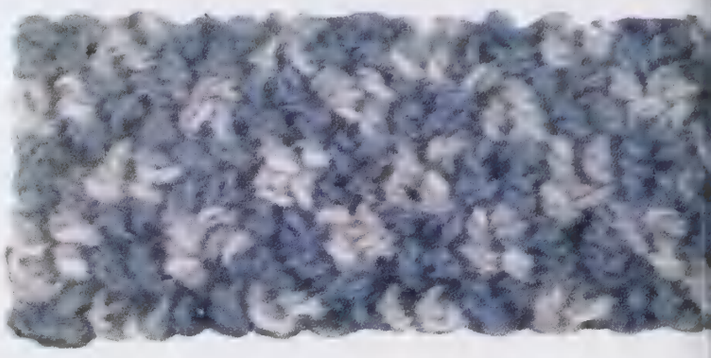
ALL ROOMS DESIGNED BY PHOEBE HYDE

The rugs in this master bedroom were chosen as practical delineators of bed and dressing table areas. The interesting tweed-textured large rug sets the color scheme of the room. Its restful blue is repeated in the smaller solid color rug that forms a big enough base for the dressing table and its chair.

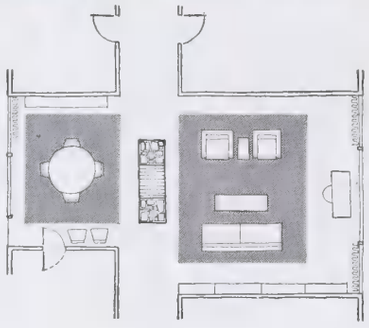
10 wily ways with color, pattern, and texture



Color-schemed floors, within a room and from one room to the next, give you a head start in decorating. Consistency is the keynote to success



● Even if you don't have open planning, any room in your house can be seen from one or more other rooms. You may think of them separately, but your eye sees them as part of a continuous whole. Learning to think of the way they look together is the key to good decorating.



Since the floors are possibly the most conspicuous element in your house, you must be particularly canny in planning them. Their color (or colors) is the logical starting point for establishing the color schemes of your rooms. Once you have decided on a basic color, you can introduce changes in it with the help of texture and pattern. But use bold pattern sparingly. The best thing is to let it stand out amid simple solid colors that are taken from it.

Color unity on the floors is especially important in an open plan such as this. Here the corridor carpeting and the dining area rug are the same; the living room rug links the two but has a softly mottled texture. Rug placement has been calculated to set off the important architectural feature of the fireplace and at the same time create traffic lanes along the wood flooring.

You can be economical with floor covering and still create lavish effects. In this small bedroom 27" wide carpet strips are mitered together to frame the bed. Result is practical (it's easier to clean under the bed) and elegant as well. The same color flows into the dressing room, bordering a small patterned rug cut from carpeting. Bathroom rug picks up its gold color from the pattern.

Three shades of blue are artfully used here. The stairway has treads of a light shade. Deeper color on risers gives a shadowed effect and emphasizes architectural pattern. For visual variety and pure practicality this family room is carpeted wall-to-wall on three sides. The fourth reaches only as far as the kitchen serving counter. Kitchen and entry hall are uncarpeted tile except for the bright welcoming entry strip, a more vivid version of the looped and tufted texture.

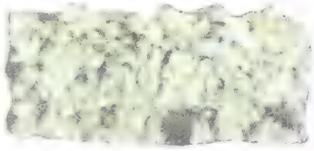
This narrow corridor is especially visible from the rooms that are adjacent to it. To give variety, each room takes its carpet color from a different color in the striped hall carpet. The broad stripes running across the hall create the illusion of greater width in this space.



In this house rooms merge together and even open through window walls to include the outdoors. The wall-to-wall carpeting keeps this feeling. It flows freely from room to room, the variations in shade seeming almost to be changes in light rather than color.

Rugs may be custom-made to reproduce any fabric pattern you choose, in any size you want, to ensure a co-ordinated room. For variety the drapery pattern here has been enlarged for the carpet. Off-white background color repeats in next room.

This two-level room has wall-to-wall carpeting in the living area and an area rug in the dining section. The color of the carpet is softened and repeated in the rug. The contrast is interesting enough to indicate separation, yet gentle enough to do it without startling the eye.

Choose the fiber that suits your purpose best

Of all the fibers and blends of fibers that make up today's rugs and carpets, no one performs miracles. Each has its virtues, each its shortcomings. As a wise buyer, learn how they all behave and choose carpet made of fibers that fill your needs best

By MARION GOUGH

■ "What is it made of?"

Not long ago a carpet-shopper never had to ask such a question. Rugs and carpets were made of wool—period. And everyone knew more or less how that familiar fiber was going to work. Mothers and grandmothers had passed on the word. First-hand experience had confirmed it.

Today your selection encompasses not only wool but cotton, plus a whole roster of man-made fibers—rayon, acetate, nylon, acrylic fiber (best known is Acrilan) and modacrylic fiber (Dynel, Verel)—and innumerable blends of these fibers with wool and with each other.

No wonder that most carpet shoppers today feel unsure of themselves. The broadness of choice is in itself confusing. You are confronted with scores of carpets, all made of different materials and blends of materials, all with different characteristics, and yet all looking so like wool that an untrained eye cannot tell the difference.

The most unnerving part of carpet buying is that you have probably not had enough practical experience with synthetic carpet fibers to judge them with confidence. They are all so relatively new—infants as compared with wool—that they seem like unknown quantities. You have the nervous feeling that you must make this big investment on someone else's say-so instead of by the personal trial-and-error knowledge you usually apply when you buy familiar materials.

Indeed, you do have to take the word of your dealer and the carpet manufacturers to learn what fibers have been used (good manufacturers put this information on labels on the back of the carpet). This is one reason why you should do your carpet dealings with reputable firms.

But even then, what does it mean to you to be told that a carpet is 100% acrylic or nylon or rayon? And when it comes to the blends of fibers, in our opinion the most ingenious use of fibers but nevertheless the most bewildering, do you know what questions to ask when you learn that a carpet is wool-and-nylon or rayon-wool-nylon or rayon-and-acetate or whatever?

You're not buying fiber names when you buy carpeting. You're buying resilience, abrasion-resistance, easy cleanability, resistance to soiling, tracking, pilling, fading. These are the crucial characteristics that a carpet should have. And they are determined by the fibers that are woven or tufted into them.

All fibers have these properties in varying degrees. None is perfection on every count. But they all have something worth while to offer. They vary in price, too. Your best assurance of making a sane and practical choice is to learn what each fiber can or cannot do, where it excels, where it falls down. Balance this knowledge against the kind of use you expect the carpet to take. Then choose the carpet that gives you what you need for the price you can afford to pay.

Those mysterious blends become comprehensible when you realize that they are made so the best qualities of each fiber can be realized, while its weaknesses are made negligible. In a blend of wool and (Please turn to page 177)

Good news for carpet-shoppers

As of March 1960 the Federal Trade Commission requires all rugs and carpets to be labeled with the generic names of the fibers used in their manufacture. These names are wool, rayon, acetate, acrylic, modified acrylic (modacrylic) and nylon. When a blend of fibers is used, the percentage of each fiber must be stated on the label. If reprocessed yarns are used instead of virgin fiber, this must also be on the label.

A sleek black and white fiber rug is reflected in a mirrored wall. Its crisp good looks are quite at home with traditional furnishings. Practical, reversible, and inexpensive, it can have great elegance when used with taste and imagination.

It's more a matter of style than money

● The old idea of a summer rug was a good one—something lighter in weight and feeling, and a good bit less expensive, something to give the room a change in appearance to go along with the slipcovers and the summer curtains. The trouble was that the rugs themselves were less than inspiring and more often than not proclaimed themselves just what they were—makeshifts.

Today the picture has changed so radically that the summer-winter distinction is completely lost. Cotton, fiber, and straw rugs are so handsome that they are often used year-round. Many are in such good style that they can be used with the most elegant of furnishings, and can live up to any fine fabric. From the examples shown on this and the next four pages you'll see what we mean.

It takes only fifteen minutes to learn how to make this handsome Persian "tile" rug.

This rug, made by a simple method known as latchet hooking, can be a joint family effort without showing variations in workmanship. The design is stamped on canvas, the yarn precut to uniform length. Design outline is hooked from back to give slight sculptured effect, then the canvas is turned over and filled in "tile" by "tile." Kits are available in the three color schemes shown here.

You can make it to order— if you make it yourself

● If you hand-make a rug, you can plan it so that it delivers just the right punch and excitement to harmonize with its surroundings. Even its exact size and shape become very important to the total effect. If it stands apart where nothing competes with it, as in the stair-landing below, it can be positively bold without becoming wearisome.

Fortunately this is just the kind of rug that is fun to plan and make. Perhaps you can design it yourself, keying it to wallpaper or fabrics in design and color. Or you can use stamped designs, adapting them in color and size to fit your need.

The same design can look quite different (as shown in the three color schemes opposite), depending on whether it is contrasty as the blue one is, or closely related as are the brown and green ones. A repeat pattern has added versatility—several units, made separately, can be used together to form a much larger rug or even one of irregular shape, such as a U-shape to go around a bed.

Of the many ways to make rugs by hand, we show examples of two kinds, the latchet (Please turn to page 171)

Mrs. Douglas says:
When we were first married I thought I knew just what went into making an ideal home.

There would be the immaculate housekeeping of my paternal grandmother, plus the consideration and kindness of my mother. Our meals would resemble those shown in the home-making magazines, and I would always look as neat and well dressed as the models in the fashion sections. Before we married we had worked out a budget so there would be no trouble about the spending of money. When we could afford it, there would be children—handsome, brilliant, and well behaved, of course. In the meantime, we'd do much entertaining and go out frequently. But best of all would be the constant companionship with each other. Life was going to be one endless date, plus all the advantages of marriage.

It was not an unworthy goal, nor was it one which was impossible to achieve. But somewhere along the line we have developed a different sense of values. Our original ideas changed, have been replaced or deepened into ideals that have less of the glamorous and more of the practical, less of the material and more of the spiritual aspects of marriage and family life.

Take housekeeping for example. During the first years of our marriage my husband (Please turn to page 183)

Mr. Douglas says:
If every man gave an honest answer, he would admit that his job is his major interest in life.

If they continued in the honest searching of their thoughts, they would also agree that most men need a home of their own to round out a satisfactory life. The nature of that home often makes the difference between a humdrum existence and abundant living.

When I think of home, I think first of pleasant, affectionate companionship and a comfortable place to rest and relax from the work of the day. After "batting the ball" on the job all day, solving problems and attempting to keep ahead of the University students I teach engineering, I look forward to going home where I can "let down." There's no need to prove myself there. They already know my good points, if any, and they certainly know my faults. But in spite of that, most of the time they all say I am Mr. Wonderful. Who wants to change a set-up like that?

I believe that in a good home there should be:

1. Praise for—and appreciation of—each other.
2. A sense of humor to ease tensions and to make life more enjoyable.
3. The determination to do the right thing, rather than the expedient. (Please turn to page 184)

What Makes a Home?

Donald Craig Douglas, his wife Thelma, and their two teenagers are justly proud of their home and family life. Like most American families, they are in favor of doing things together, but at the same time believe in fostering individuality. When they were asked just what they consider a good home to be, they revealed some interesting areas of complete agreement, as well as others of almost complete disagreement. This blending of opposites is the real secret of what makes a good home

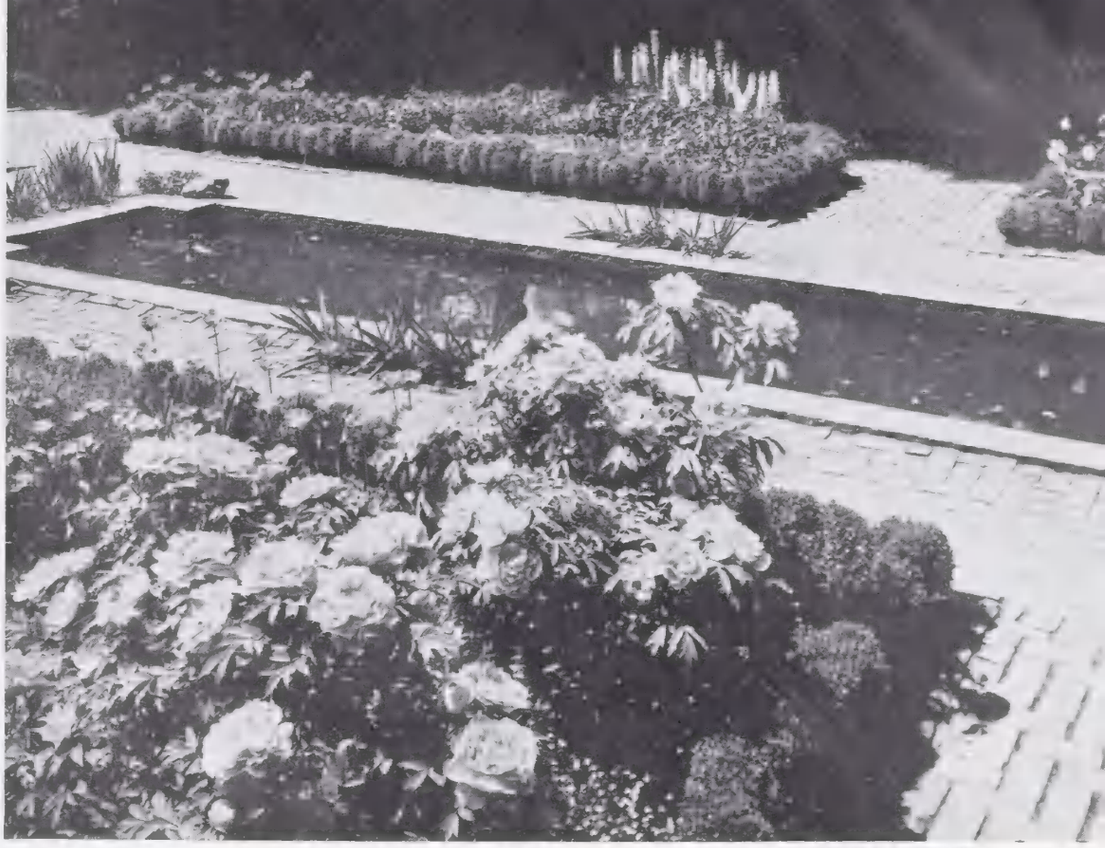
Seventeen-year-old Bob says:
Parents should encourage hobbies, like having pets. Turtles, hamsters, and guinea pigs are important.

When I say pets are important, it's because they give you a sense of responsibility—and that's something you are going to have plenty of in later life. My folks try to encourage us in taking on responsibilities. Whatever pets I have, I am the one who has to feed them, keep them clean, and arrange for their care if I plan to be away. If they don't eat table scraps, I have to buy their food too. Fish food and bird food didn't break me and chickens help pay their own way when they grow up, but guinea pigs can eat their weight in greens, it seems. Horses are even more expensive and shouldn't be owned by anyone who does not have a steady job.

I think owning a horse is good for me, though. My share of the family money took care of my own needs, but having to board out a horse really pushed me into getting after-school and summer work. That, and dating. Horses and girls are two of the world's biggest expenses, but I must admit that I like them both in spite of it.

Taxidermy is another of my hobbies and I'm allowed to practice it in certain parts of the house according to the directions given me by the men in the Bird Division of the University Museum. (Please turn to page 184)

Thirteen-year-old Jean says:
A successful home should have a way for children to have spending money.



We think it is better if it is an allowance instead of paying for work that should be done, unless it is the kind of work that our parents would hire done anyway, like washing the outsides of windows or mowing grass, perhaps. If parents got paid for all the jobs they did around home, the family would soon be bankrupt, so why should children receive pay?

I think our family has about the best budget idea. Each week we get a large enough allowance to pay for our necessities. Mine goes for a viola lesson, church collection, clothing, gifts, Christmas savings club, school supplies and personal. (Personal includes treats, amusements, etc.)

When I want extra money for a camera, for instance, or to spend on a vacation, I make it by working for other people. Usually I mow grass or shovel snow because I like outdoor work best. Sometimes I baby-sit. Since my brother and I have been on this budget, we have not only learned to budget our money, but we have learned to do a better job of budgeting our time, too.

I think that in a good home the family would go together on small trips quite (Please turn to page 184)

are no longer a gamble

Once rare and unpredictable, this magnificent shrub has yielded to new cultural methods and is now available to all

By JEAN LAWSON

● If there was ever a despot in the plant world, it was the tree peony. Called "The King of Flowers" by the ancient Chinese and prized in ounces of gold, its abundant, soup-plate-size blossoms have ever since brought men to their knees in worshipful admiration. Now that new and hardy strains are available at prices nudging the $10 bracket, it deserves a place of honor in every garden.

Shatteringly handsome when in bloom, the tree peony can have close to 100 blossoms at a time (70 were counted on the specimen at the left). And if you can bear to cut such breathtaking flowers, you might float one—or more if there is space—in a crystal bowl as a summer centerpiece. The effect will be spectacular, and the protection of the glass against breezes will keep the blossoms in good condition for a week or more.

Though it was once a problem child, today the tree peony can be planted successfully without unusual care. You can be confident that you will be lavishly rewarded for your investment. What does it take to grow these extraordinary flowers?

Climate is one of the least of the limitations. Found wild on steep mountainsides, the shrub is constitutionally tolerant of cold, snowy winters and hot summers. In this country only the most rigorous extremes of north and south are out of bounds. Like other plants from (Please turn to page 187)

Cooking by steam—a Chinese art

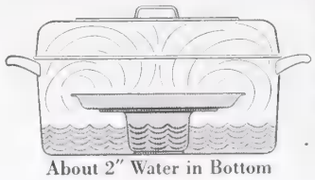
The first complete article on a unique but simple way of cooking to preserve all the delicious natural flavors of foods. If you want to achieve new culinary triumphs, try this centuries-old method called "Jeng" by the Chinese

By F. T. CHENG

Author of "Musings of a Chinese Gourmet"

● Although it is useful, simple, and practical, cooking by steam is unknown to the West. The Chinese, owing to their instinctive love of the enjoyment of life and their culinary inclination, if not genius, must have discovered or invented this way of cooking almost at the dawn of the creation of their cuisine, and have since employed it as one of the principal forms of cooking both in banquets and in their home cooking.

Since a great feature of Chinese cooking is variety, in a well-arranged banquet, the menu generally consists of dishes of suitable proportion, which represent most, if not all, the principal forms of cooking, such as roasting, grilling, baking, low-oil-quick-stir-frying, double-sauce-pan cooking, stewing, deep-frying. As cooking by steam is one of the principal forms and a very good one too, its omission would be conspicuous by its absence.



Chinese cooking can be very complicated and yet also very simple, for cooking is an art, which often at its best has its triumphs in simplicity. This may be said of the Chinese way of cooking by steam, which is simple in preparation, unique in kind, and most effective in preserving in the maximum degree the original taste of the thing cooked. This no doubt accounts for its popularity in home cooking. Now, let its virtues be explained one by one:

It is simple in preparation. All that one has to do is to have the thing concerned (for example, a lobster) first cleaned and then put on a plate. The plate is then put into a utensil, with a stand to hold it. (Please turn to page 164)

How to cook fish in a whirling sea of steam

For stove-top steaming, as done for centuries by the Chinese in bamboo steamers (like the one above), you can use utensils like ours (below). Use a covered pan that will hold a platter. Set platter on a dish to keep it above boiling water. Almost any fish, whole or cut, fresh or frozen (thawed) can be steamed. Before steaming, sprinkle on (a two-pounder): 2 scallions, chopped fine; 6 slices green ginger and 5 shredded, dried mushrooms (soaked first to soften); 2 tablespoons peanut oil; 2 teaspoons each, sherry and soy sauce; salt; pepper. Start fish cooking in steam. It's cooked when test-straw touches bone, comes up clean. For ingredients not locally available, see sources, page 167.

About 2" Water in Bottom

Shellfish steamed this way offers new taste delights

To cook whole lobsters or crabs in a volume of steam, use the same kind of utensils and method we give for steaming fish on the opposite page. Wash the shellfish thoroughly, and put on platter with it a slice of green ginger and two or three whole scallions—seasoners to be removed after they have released their pungent flavor. Put platter on a dish in a pan with about two inches of water already boiling. Cover and continue to cook, confined in steam. If water boils low, add more. Lobsters will be ready soon after they have turned a fiery red; crabs, a pinky-white. Whichever you steam, remember that the shellfish, as well as its serving platter, absorbs intense heat, and it will continue to cook after you remove it. To enjoy the food's fullest flavor, eat it while it is piping hot. For a delicious sauce to serve with steamed crabs, mix finely-chopped green ginger with vinegar.

Steamed meat gives something new to western palates

Steaming meat—fillet of beef, lean leg of lamb, loin of pork or chicken breasts—adds a distinct new taste to familiar cuts. Slice meat thinly across vein. Moisten slices in soy sauce, with a little cornstarch added. Soy flavors meat, starch helps to hold in juices. With one pound of meat, mix one-quarter pound fresh mushrooms, cut the same size as the meat slices. Place on platter, and, as directed for cooking fish and shellfish in a volume of steam, set on a stand in a pan made ready with about two inches of boiling water. Cover and cook, but except for the pork, never 100%. All meat except pork (it must be well done) should still be a little pinkish when removed, as it continues to cook in the hot platter.

Steamed custard with shrimp is a culinary masterpiece

This custard owes its surprises to a salty taste and to delicious chunks of shrimp, lobster, or other shellfish. The utensils you'll need are a covered fire-proof dish for custard and a covered pan with about two inches of water in it for steaming. Ingredients needed (for four servings): 6 eggs and one-half eggshell of water for each; 3 teaspoons peanut or other vegetable oil; one-half teaspoon soy sauce; a dash of pepper; 1 scallion, finely-chopped; a slice of green ginger, minced fine; 1 teaspoon sherry; and 6 shrimps, fresh (or if frozen, thawed), cleaned and sliced in half, lengthwise; or their equivalent in small pieces of lobster. Beat eggs and water together, mix in seasonings, and add seafood. Pour into dish, and cover. Set dish in a pan of steaming (but never boiling) water, and cover pan. Cook over low flame until test-straw comes up clean.

Furniture that makes itself at home anywhere

Designed for the present without breaking from the past, this new furniture blends obligingly with any background

● This handsomely styled furniture has the ingratiating quality of adapting itself harmoniously to any environment, modern or traditional. This is due largely to the fact that the designs, though contemporary in feeling, are based on timeless elements from the past. The filigree panels ornamenting the chair backs and cabinet doors use an ancient quatrefoil motif. And antique Chinese designs inspired the door-pulls and influenced the upcurved backs of the upholstered pieces.

This borrowing from the past has also resulted in a pleasing variety among the pieces in the group—they are related in style but modified so that each has its own individuality. Painted surfaces are mixed with mellow wood tones to develop this sense of variety. The wood faces are swirl mahogany and the structural parts solid Philippine mahogany. This furniture, called "Inspiration" and manufactured by Broyhill Premier, was photographed in a model home designed by John Michael for the Brookhaven development, Allentown, Pennsylvania.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

The contemporary desk is perfectly congenial with a traditional chair. The golden brown "Tokay" mahogany finish blends well with other woods, can be combined successfully with things you already have. Since pieces like this are not limited in use to one type of architecture, they are not problems when you move. Interiors of this house were designed by Schoen Furniture, Allentown.

Although its design is a composite of elements from the past, the "Inspiration" group is at ease in the most modern setting. Pieces are correlated in style but pleasantly individual. See how the filigree design used on dining chair backs is repeated on the lacquered chest. Door pulls and ferrules are Chinese in feeling. The subtly curved back of upholstered arm chair echoes this popular Oriental influence.

Party tables and chairs have a distinctive style of their own but are at home with all other furnishings in the group. Caned backs have a pleasant texture, give a sense of lightness and airiness. Nevertheless, the total effect is firm and substantial.

The graceful upcurving lines of the chair and sofa backs and the gently-shaped detail of their wooden frames give these upholstered pieces great elegance. Their unobtrusive good looks have an ageless quality that adapts to the style of any period. Note, for example, how well traditional furnishings (above), such as the chair in the foreground, harmonize with these contemporary ones. At the same time they are extremely practical and well-scaled for today's houses (see sectional sofa at left).

The different pieces in this group are related to each other in feeling, but are carefully individualized. They can be used together without dullness or monotony Highlights gleam on the mahogany filigree panels that decorate the buffet and side chair. These touches of ornament add great visual interest to the furniture. The total impression, however, is simple and modern.

PROVENCE—another name for a traveler's dream

It's a scenic banquet . . . a treasury of antiquity . . . the heart of gastronomy . . . the mother country of modern art . . . a land of fêtes and festivals . . . and a perfect goal for the off-season traveler

By MITCHELL GOODMAN

Provence, called the "kingdom of the sun," is one of the rarer travel adventures, a sort of quintessence of everything a voyager hopes to find. This fertile, gold-smiling land, whose life and lightness was inspiration to Van Gogh, Cézanne, Matisse, Renoir, Gauguin, Dufy, spreads its diversity before you in everything from bouillabaisse to Roman ruins. It's at its best in the clear light of fall and winter, when the tourists have gone and its unhurried, civilized "real" life resumes.

PHOTOGRAPH BY INA BANDY

● A region of the greatest diversity of life and scene—that's Provence. Yet it's hardly larger than Vermont, stretching from the foothills of the Alps to the Rhône, and from Montélimar to the sea. Freed of the heat and of the hot breath of mass tourism, it is at its best in the clear light of fall and winter. Calm, moderate, ripe, pastoral, and intensely civilized, it restores the appetite for life, for re-creation.

Summer is the time of the five great Provençal festivals of music and drama (Aix, Avignon, Menton, Orange, Nîmes)—but fall and winter are the times of life as it is lived, of uncrowded hotels, and of itineraries unfettered by long lists of advance reservations. By mid-September the tourist rush falls off, and from the end of September until Easter the traveler is more or less alone with the local people (who are in turn acting more like their own relaxed selves again). It is then that the magical space-and-light effects of this marvelous landscape take hold: where distances are short and yet there is a liberating sense of spaciousness, of clarity and of solitude.

Still remote from the world of mass living and standardization, Provence lives by the grape, the garlic, and the olive. Its people are shepherds, fishermen, and small farmers, deeply rooted in their soil and in their rich tradition. Two thousand years ago it was the garden spot of the Roman Empire. Today it is, if anything, even more alive with trees and flowers and orchards. Its hills are lavender and myrtle and thyme. Fig, eucalyptus, mulberry, and umbrella pine, mimosa, and Spanish broom—all things flourish together, as in one of Breughel's paintings of earthly paradises.

when the water therein is actually hard boiling. In ten minutes or so, depending on the size or weight of the thing being cooked, the dish is ready. Nothing can be more simple than that.

It is unique in kind. Cooking by steam affords a taste distinct from that derived from any other form of cooking and is peculiar to the Chinese cuisine.

It is most effective in preserving in the maximum degree the original taste of the thing cooked. Nature has its own secrets or mysteries as well as its own reasons for creating anything in the universe, so much so that in creating anything edible it invariably endows it with a taste that belongs to it exclusively, however slightly it may differ from others or even those of the same family. For instance, the meat of the red salmon differs in taste from that of the white salmon, that of the wild duck differs from the domestic duck, the tangerine differs from the orange. This distinct taste is highly appreciated by the connoisseur, who would like it preserved as far as possible. Otherwise, things of more or less the same family would taste the same or almost the same, and this would stun his fine palate. Incidentally, this serves as a lesson for not using the same kind of sauce of a dominating flavor, such as tomato, curry, or sweet and sour sauce, or the like, in cooking several dishes in one meal; for that would make all of them taste very much alike and this would be bad cooking.

Cooking by steam, however, is the very form of cooking that will preserve the original taste. Very little, if any, of the natural flavor of the thing cooked is lost in the juice, and no sauce is used that would tamper with nature, except in some cases where certain desirable ingredients may be used for enhancing the original taste as described below.

First of all, a few immutable principles about steam-cooking should be stated and followed in all cases:

1. Have a cooking utensil big enough to hold comfortably, with a stand, the dish containing the food to be cooked and to hold sufficient water capable of producing a big volume of steam when necessary.
2. Put in the dish only when the water in the utensil is actually hard boiling.
3. Right after the dish has been put in, turn the heat to the maximum for cooking sea food, to medium, for cooking meat, and to less than medium for cooking anything with eggs such as the custard described later.
4. A few minutes or so after the dish has been put in, take the lid off the utensil for a second to see how well the food is cooking. It should be neither overdone nor underdone.
5. Serve the food the moment that it is considered cooked. Otherwise it may be overdone, for because of the intense heat it has absorbed, the "process of cooking" continues until it gets cool; or it may not taste its best, because foods cooked by steam present their full flavor only when they are eaten hot, not when they are eaten luke-warm.

The few principles set out above are self-evident. The third, perhaps, needs some elucidation. The texture of the flesh of sea food is finer than that of meat and has a "freshness" that can be preserved in a maximum degree only when the actual cooking requires only a minimum of time. Hence, the heat should be raised to maximum immediately after the dish holding the sea food has been put in the cooking utensil. Meat, however, requires only a medium heat, because its texture is coarser than that of the sea food and, if steamed over too intense heat, would taste coarse.

Lastly, dishes cooked with eggs in the form of custard need only such heat as will keep the water boiling. Otherwise wrinkles form on the surface of the custard.

Here are some instances of steam cooking that may be suggested.

It can never be over-emphasized that recipes are not like doctors' prescriptions, so that judgment must be exercised in every case in regard to the time required in the process of cooking. In the latter respect, remember always that a food considered "well done" is neither overdone nor underdone. Whenever you try a new form of cooking, don't be disappointed if are unsuccessful the first or n the second time, but try to l out the cause of failure and improve your performance in Slices should be mixed with a e).

To be in keeping with the Chie culinary tradition, which always favors cooking meat with some kind of vegetable, a suitable amount of fresh mushrooms sliced the size of the meat to be mixed with it is highly recommended, for they will make an agreeable combination. No other vegetables seem to be suitable, for only mushrooms can be properly cut to the size of the meat slices in conformity with what may be called "the rule of symmetry" (that is, the accessory should, if practical, be cut to the size of the principal as far as possible). What is more important, they cook within the time required for the meat slices. Moreover, the mushrooms benefited by the meat juice taste delicious, providing something quite new to the Western palate.

Minced, the meat should preferably be mixed, in due proportion, with ingredients of the vegetable kingdom. The most suitable vegetable ingredients for this purpose are water chestnuts or petit pois. The chestnuts can be bought in tins and should be chopped into tiny pieces in order to mix well with the minced meat. The whole thing should be mixed together with a little cornstarch or white part of the egg (so as to make it stick together), a suitable quantity of soya, and salt to taste. It can be made into the form of balls, which would look elegant, or just in the form of a flat cake.

"Salted" custard. To the Western mind, custard always suggests sweetness. However, this is one of the steamed dishes most popular with the Chinese because it is easy to digest and simple to prepare when one has no appetite or no inclination to do any cooking, though having a desire to eat. Try it with hot rice and soya and you will appreciate its nicety. All one has to do in preparing this dish is to have a few eggs beaten up, add enough water to make it into a form of custard, add a little soya, sprinkle with finely cut spring onions, and then steam it. This is certainly the simplest dish of the custard family within the domain of our Chinese cuisine. We have already told (page 151) how to make custard with lobster or shrimp. It is an interesting sight, apart from being appetizing to the nose and the palate. When cooked, the lobster or shrimp look red, the eggs look yellow, and the spring onions look white and green. The custard, in particular, is delicious, having benefited by the juice of the lobster or shrimp. It should be served with hot rice, when salt or additional soya may be added, if desired.

Custard with oysters. Say, a dozen eggs, beaten up, mixed with half a pint of oysters, (whole or minced), seasoned with soya salt, pepper, some finely-cut green ginger and spring onion, a dessertspoonful of sherry, a tablespoonful of vegetable oil, and three ounces of minced pork (half fat). Add no extra water because the oysters already have water. Mix the whole thing well before it is steamed. A combination like this is, by itself, sufficient to suggest that it must make a delicious dish.

It has been said that this steam cooking is very popular with the Chinese in home cooking on account of its simplicity. But, from the Chinese point of view, there is another reason which may be said to be dietetic and is based on centuries of experience rather than on scientific research. The Chinese, in their daily home cooking, seldom resort to frying, roasting, grilling or the like, and when a Chinese is ill or in convalescence, he especially avoids eating anything cooked in these ways.

The reason is that, in their opinion, or rather according to centuries of experience, these forms of cooking are apt to create in one's system what the Chinese call "reh chih," a term readily comprehensible to the Chinese, but a puzzle to Westerners. An eminent Chinese doctor of long Western training says that the nearest equivalent to the expression in Western language terms is "indigestion."

This can hardly satisfy the average Chinese, who thinks that he knows better by experience, for to him indigestion means inability to convert food into absorbable form, for instance, the result of swallowing food without chewing it well or eating what by nature is difficult to digest. But what is called "reh chih" is something quite different. However, though the term is untranslatable, it can be explained as "an acute or accumulated disagreeable effect, particularly harmful to a person during illness or in delicate health, resulting from eating things cooked through direct contact with the fire or in deep- or low-oil frying."

And for this reason, an added popularity is accorded by the Chinese to cooking by steam. As food and its preparation have something to do with the health of a nation, this dietetic preference of the Chinese for steam-cooking is interesting, particularly since the Chinese generally look younger than their age and have comparatively fewer cases of obesity, high blood pressure, and heart disease.

WHAT SHOULD YOU EXPECT OF RUGS AND CARPETS

by the occupants of the room.

These are some of the things you must bear in mind as part of the over-all picture—plus the fact that the floor, though it is integrated with walls and furniture, is also a base, and should look like one, firm and stable. So, especially for broad expanses, choose designs that "stay down" on the floor visually. Make sure that the pattern or texture or sculptured design doesn't constantly command your eye when it's laid on the floor, or seem to put unnerving obstacles in your way.

These obstacles are psychological tricks that certain patterns play on your eye—bouquets of roses may pop up like bushes, geometric figures may loom like sudden flights of stairs. This is destructive of your sense of serenity, to say the least.

In fact, as a wise rule of thumb, we advise you to reserve any clearly defined pattern for small areas—a dining alcove, a dressing room, a foyer—places where you spend only a short time, time enough for you to enjoy the eye-refreshing respite of color and drawing without being overwhelmed and wearied by it. In general, the floor coverings in the most frequently used rooms, where they have to wear well psychologically and "stay down," are most successful if they are of bland, shadowy, even blurry character. Monochromatic schemes, given the subtlest patterning or made quietly interesting by texture, are excellent choices.

In a large room, small takes of more decisive color and pattern in an accent rug, or the diversion of furniture groupings about area rugs will prevent monochromatic serenity from becoming monotony.

The floor is one part of the room of which the eye sees more than any other part and in more perspectives. You see your floor covering at many planes and from many levels, sitting, standing, walking. Even unconsciously the peripheral vision of your eye catches side views of it as it recedes beyond your direct vision.

Remember this when you choose your floor covering and don't fall into the snare of making your decision from a tiny swatch of carpeting fabric held up in your hand. (This is one view of your carpeting you will never have once it's laid on the floor.) Make your choice so far as possible from floor covering samples you can walk on, look down at, and be surrounded by.

LITTLE PEAS with Verve

According to medieval legend, the thunder-god Thor gave peas to men. And men respectfully ate peas only on his day, Thursday.

Today, however, the rare taste of two exceptional kinds of peas has caused the bolder sort of men to eat peas more often. One of these kinds, as you well know, is the celebrated petits pois of France. The other is its only rival, a special kind of peas being grown on certain acres in this country.

These little American peas are very sprightly to the taste. They're little peas with verve. Very young and tender. Their flavor quite unlike that of any other peas you may have tasted.

This most unusual flavor begins with the genealogy of these little peas. They are grown from seed developed through hundreds of recorded breedings and cross-breedings. This seed is planted in soils specially reserved for its nurture, in a climate peas like best.

The stripling plants are carefully tended during their brief life. And when the little peas have achieved their peak flavor, they are picked and packed promptly to retain all their succulence.

These verve-y little peas are called Le Sueur Brand peas. Finer grocers do their best to keep them in supply. May we suggest that you order several tins and enjoy them tonight? Or Thursday?

HOW TO PRESERVE THAT FRESH NEW LOOK IN RUGS AND CARPETS

However, it is not an easy task to surface-clean a large rug or wall-to-wall carpeting, particularly when heavy pieces of furniture must be moved in or out of the room. At best, such cleaning is an interim measure between professional rug cleanings.

Wet and Dry Rug Shampoos

Dry-cleaning solvents that are effective in removing greasy soil may be inflammable, toxic, or both, and should be used only with great caution. All other rug-cleaning preparations fall into two general categories—powdered and wet or foam shampoos.

Powdered cleaners are easy to use and prevent the mishaps that may result from wetting a carpet too much. They include Bigelow's "Sprinkle-Kleen," Servicemaster's "Drybriten," Johnson's "Rug Cleaner," "Powder-ene," a dry-cleaning compound known as "Host," and several more.

Certain products in this group are also widely used by professional rug cleaners, particularly for on-location cleaning of wall-to-wall carpeting. Some, like "Host," are sold only through rug cleaners or rug dealers, who also have available on a rental basis special electric rug-cleaning machines. "Drybriten," too, is sold chiefly in carpet specialty stores.

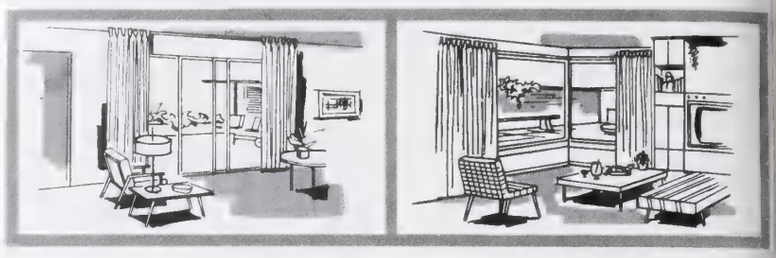
These detergent- or solvent-saturated powders (some include both) are brushed into the carpeting by hand or with the rug-cleaning brushes of an electric floor machine. Soil is loosened and absorbed by the powdered material and later picked up by vacuuming. Such cleaners are completely safe to use on any floor covering. They are especially recommended for cut pile of short or medium depth and on carpets containing a high percentage of rayon, for some of these may suffer a loss of pile textures during wet shampooing.

Rugs with a deep or looped pile or a high-low texture may tend to trap a residue of powdered cleaner that will be difficult to pick up with a vacuum. This does the rug no harm, but on a plain dark-color floor covering the powdery residue might be considered unsightly.

More popular for home use than the powders are aerated foam cleaners such as Duraclean and water-base detergents such as Servicemaster's "Fiber Fresh," Bissell's "Rug Shampoo," "Easy Glamur," "Glamorene," "Cotton Zeen," "Magiclean," and many others. These are applied with a brush or by the sponge-and-brush shampoo machines which dispense the cleaning solution and shampoos the rug in one operation. The Electrolux vacuum cleaner has a new Turbo-tool attachment which dispenses detergent cleaner and gently scrubs the carpeting.

In using any water-base rug cleaner, foam or liquid, certain precautions must be taken to achieve the best results. Rug fibers should be checked for color fastness. This is easily done by rubbing a damp cloth lightly over an inconspicuous corner of the rug. If the cloth picks up any color, better use one of the powdered dry-cleaning compounds.

Never use soaps for surface-cleaning rugs or carpets, or for spot removal. Avoid ammonia solutions, washing soda, or any of the common household cleaning agents normally used for cleaning walls or hard-surface floors.



Without thorough rinsing, which is impractical in home rug cleaning, a residue may be left that attracts soil, affects color, or has other damaging effects. Only a non-alkaline synthetic detergent should be used, and most of the better-known water-base rug cleaners now on the market can be so classified.

Any preparation in question may be tested by pouring a small amount of solution into a glass, mixing it with a little water and then adding a teaspoonful of vinegar. If the solution becomes cloudy, it is probably a soap cleaner. To test its alkalinity, use pink litmus paper which is available at any drug store for a few pennies. If pink litmus moistened in the solution turns blue, it is alkaline and to be avoided for rug cleaning.

How you clean your rugs is almost more important than what you use. Once you decide to surface-clean an entire rug, use professional methods. Remove the furniture in the room. Brush the carpeting lightly opening the pile to permit removal by vacuuming of as much imbedded soil as possible. Only after thorough vacuuming, should the rug be cleaned in small areas, overlapping each one until the entire rug is cleaned.

The first rule of home shampooing or surface cleaning is: Be sparing with the cleaning solution. Once carpeting is thoroughly wet, it will dry very slowly, with possible danger of mildew growth as well as the inconvenience of not being able to use the room. If moisture reaches a jute backing, you may be in for serious trouble. Water causes a chemical action on the jute and cotton backing, creating a syrupy substance which, by capillary action, may travel along the rug fibers to the top, creating yellow or brown stains. Dry-cleaning solvents, permeating a jute backing, can also be damaging, causing definite deterioration.

Always carefully check the dispensing action of home-shampoo equipment. Clean a small area and feel the carpeting with your hand to know how far the moisture is permeating. If the rug feels wet, use less solution. It should feel barely moist. It is far better to use too little than too much. Work gently over the surface of the rug. The cleaning preparation dissolves the dirt without undue pressure. Most such products leave tiny crystallized particles on the rug which should be swept up with the vacuum cleaner as soon as the rug is bone dry.

Speed the drying process if you can. Forced air from a fan directed on the carpeting is a help. Because of the importance of fast drying, many professional cleaners recommend on-location wet cleaning of rugs and carpets during the winter months when the heat is on.

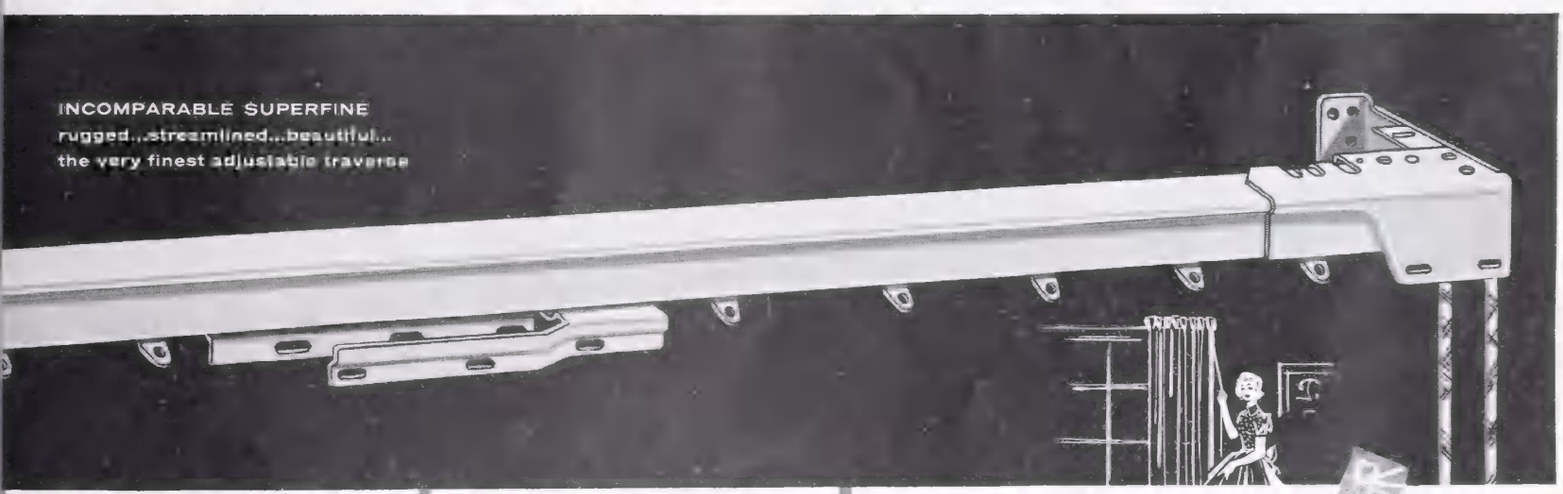
Never place furniture on a damp carpet or rug. Wood stains may be transferred or metal glides may rust, leaving stains that are almost impossible to remove. If furniture must be moved back into place before the rug is completely dry, place protective strips of plastic under furniture legs, or several thicknesses of wax paper. If nothing else, the damp fibers are likely to mat from the weight of the furniture.

No one other than a skilled professional can say whether floor coverings will respond better to wet or dry cleaning powders or compounds. Some manufacturers now label rugs and carpeting with specific information on cleaning. Otherwise, it is only by experimenting that you will discover which product will produce the best results. (See list of cleaning preparations on page 170.)

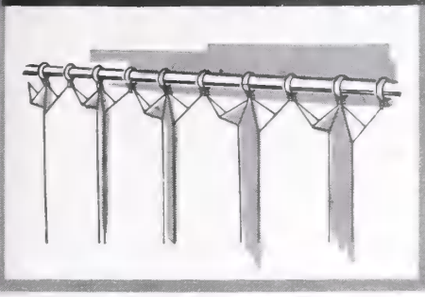
Soil retardants and anti-statics, while useful in some instances, are best applied by professional rug cleaners. Any soil retardant, if it is to be successful, will coat the fibers and change the feel of carpeting to some extent. Nor will such products work any miracles. Any rug or carpet will still soil. A soil retardant is no protection against spots and spills.

It is generally agreed that anti-statics have not as yet been perfected. While they may reduce static electricity, they do not completely eliminate it. In very dry atmosphere they tend to powder off, and if applied in heavy concentrate, they serve to attract soil. Many professional rug cleaners suggest, as the best remedy, adding humidity to a room by a collection of growing plants which must be kept moist.

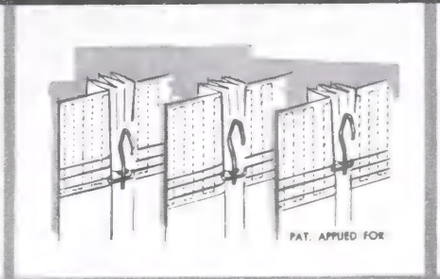
Professional Rug Cleaning



Special rug problems of any kind are best solved by the professional rug cleaner. However effective home surface-cleaning may be, rugs need a thorough professional cleaning at least every two years, and perhaps more frequently. With more powerful and more carefully controlled equipment, the professional can deep-clean the pile without harming the backing.



Even though a skilled rug cleaner can do an excellent on-location job, men of long experience in the field admit that at best this cleaning is only 65 per cent as good as that done in a cleaning plant, when floor covering is very dirty. On light soil, an on-location cleaning will almost match that done in a plant, whether cleaned with foam, water-base detergent, or powder compound.



There are at least 19 different types of rug cleaning done in plants, each of which has its special application. Immersion washing, for example, is excellent for cotton rugs. Immersion dry cleaning is frequently preferred for cleaning Navajo rugs and Japanese hooked rugs. Pressure jet cleaning is a system which washes and rinses rugs with jets of detergent and water, under a pressure of 250 to 400 pounds per square inch. Still another method uses a flat bed over which rugs and carpets are slowly advanced, while rows of brushes gently scrub them with detergent, followed by cascades of water to rinse away every trace of soil. Many plants employ several of these or other methods.

What about shrinkage in wet cleaning? A rug backing of jute and cotton is subject to some shrinkage. How much depends upon the construction of the rug. Shrinkage can often be controlled by a cleaning plant where frames are used and equipment designed to retain the original size. The better the construction of a rug, the less dimensional change there is likely to be. If you are concerned about this possibility, check with your rug cleaner. By examining the floor covering in question, he can tell you if shrinkage can be minimized.

Selecting a Rug Cleaner

Where you cannot rely on the personal recommendation of an experienced friend, the classified section of your telephone book will list a number of rug cleaners, some of whom will state in their ads that they are members of NIRC, the National Institute of Rug Cleaning. Institute headquarters at Bethesda, Maryland, include a research laboratory where chemical and cleaning compounds and all kinds of mechanical tools and aids are constantly under inspection and test. Information compiled on all new developments is made available to members.

RUG AND CARPET CLEANING PRODUCTS

hook method with yarn on canvas which is English in origin, always having a cut pile; and those done by the commonly accepted American hooking method (rugs, page 145) of simply pulling loops of wool fabric strips or yarn through a fabric backing.

In latchet hooking, which is actually a short-cut knotting process based on the Ghordis knot used in Persian rugs, much is predetermined for you. The yarn is precut, so the pile is always the same, the only variation possible being a slightly sculptured effect done by reversing the tufts as in the design shown. The uniformity of the spacing is also determined by the size of the canvas, just as it would be in needlepoint. However, the pile is deep and luxurious, being about 1" thick, and as each tuft is actually knotted into the canvas backing, there is no danger of its ever being pulled out by vacuuming or snagging. It is very easy to do, and requires no frame or paraphernalia. While not particularly speedy, it can be carried about as you work and provides many hours of relaxing activity in the making.

The hooked method, which America adopted as its own in early days and brought to a fine flower of perfection, is done with simple loops pulled through a loose fabric to any height the maker wishes and depends on the closeness of the spacing to hold the loops in place. It is usually done on a frame to hold the canvas taut, so is not particularly mobile and, as it allows for great variation in material, spacing and direction of loops as well as height of pile, much more is left to the maker in determining the exact character of this rug.

While the traditional method requires more experimentation and skill, the possible variations are endless. The pile can be long or short, cut or uncut, the material used may range from very coarse to extremely fine, and the strand used can range from eight to nine inches to a continuous yarn. The tendency for loops to snag or pull out in vacuuming can be minimized by coating the back of the rug after it is finished with a latex-based liquid such as Dritz Rugback.

The Romantic Concerto

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

■ The Romantic Movement began before Beethoven's death and in the decades after—that is to say in the middle part of the 19th Century—it engulfed men's minds and poured into their hearts such fullness and such warm strength that it inundated all art. Every artist fell under its spell.

Dress and manners, speech and philosophy were influenced by it. It postulated that not only reason, intellect, and wit, which were honored traits of the 18th Century, were important, but it recognized the claims of passion and emotion as well. We must not be guided by reason alone, everybody told everybody else. We must make room for the sense of mystery, must acknowledge the indefinable and savor the incomprehensible. Reason toppled from its throne. Sentiment succeeded. Clear eyes became moist and hearts overflowed.

Those who walked the road of Romance had their choice of pursuing two divergent paths. Either they ambled in the woods and fields on a clear spring day, looked up at the blue sky, heard the song of the lark, and determined that life was good; or they walked in shadowy ways and knew that love was destined to be unrequited, that life was a burden, and surcease found only in the grave. But they agreed sentiment was all.

It is perhaps unnecessary to add that the people who read this poetry, heard this music, or looked at these paintings could do so, and could sigh feelingly, without such sighs interfering in the least with their efforts to drive a shrewd bargain or develop industry by paying the lowest possible wages.

The Romantic Movement found particularly apt expression in music, which is the most romantic of all the arts. In music it favored the concerto, which is the most romantic form of music. It features, as you will remember, the egregious individual against the society of the orchestra, and this is essentially a romantic conception.

Not only did the individual of th concerto become more "individual and self-assertive, but the entir composition shook off restraint The orchestra became larger. Th sounds it made became richer, th musical language extravagant.

The Romantic Movement so fa vored music that around the middl of the erudite 19th Century th world was blessed with an almos unbelievable plethora of musica genius, the like of which had neve before been heard. Take, for ex ample, the year 1849. It was th year in which that arch-Romanti of them all, Chopin, died.

Chopin was both the early mes senger of Romantic tidings and th most gracious apostle of the move ment. He was the lyric poet of th piano, his genius blessed with gift for melody of infinite grace. H composed two of the most famou piano concertos.

In this year, there were at work Bizet, the young Brahms, Rossin Saint-Saëns, Berlioz, Schuman (whose unique Piano Concerto ha been composed four years pre viously), Wagner, Verdi, Franck and Liszt, to mention only a few o the greatest.

Shortly to come were Grieg an Moussorgsky, Tchaikovsky, an Rimski-Korsakov. All of these wer Romantics; many of them create concertos.

IT IS not difficult to trace a line a golden thread through the de velopment of the concerto from th classicism of Mozart through th classic-romantic grandeur of Be thoven, to the true Romantic styl

Brahms was still a relative Beethoven and retained a measu of the classic monumentality. H Second Piano Concerto, the longe and certainly one of the most ex acting of all concertos, speaks i the grand tradition.

Schumann, who composed a co certo each for the cello and for th violin, in addition to the popula Piano Concerto, was a full-blow Romanticist.

Berlioz was a Romanticist with a wild mane and Byronic extravagance. His Harold in Italy, deriving ostensibly from Byron's Childe Harold, is sometimes called a tone poem, but it is in point of fact a concerto for viola and orchestra.

The chronology of the works just mentioned is inexact. But it is unimportant. The point is that Romance permeated the soil of music. The garden proliferated, bringing forth even more perfumed and intensely colored flowers. Until, of course, the excesses committed by the lesser men caused a reaction.

But that reaction is more to be observed among composers than among audiences. It is significant that even today the concertos that audiences like best of all (by and large and always excepting Beethoven) are the Romantic concertos. Even today, with all the struggle the 20th-century composers have waged against it, the listener remains captivated by concertos a hundred years old which sing out with unembarrassed sentiment. The latest of the towering Romantics was Rachmaninoff who was influenced by Tchaikovsky. Rachmaninoff, himself a great pianist, wrote four concertos for the piano as well as the Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini, which is a concerto as well. Indisputably both Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. One and Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. Two are the favorites of modern audiences.

Records for the novice

If you have a beginning interest in the concerto, you cannot go wrong by choosing the products of the Romantic school. For your convenience, we list a few of them

Tchaikovsky: Concerto No. One and Violin Concerto
Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. Two
Grieg: Piano Concerto
Chopin: Piano Concertos No. One and No. Two
Brahms: Piano Concerto No. Two and Violin Concerto Rachmaninoff: Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini
Liszt: Piano Concerto No. Two
Mendelssohn: Piano Concerto No. One and Violin Concerto
Schumann: Piano Concerto and Cello Concerto
Berlioz: Harold in Italy
Paganini: Violin Concerto No. One

nylon, wool is there for its resilience and soft springiness. Nylon is there to add its superior abrasion resistance, toughness, and easy cleanability. The reason for the rayon in a blend of rayon and wool, could well be rayon's wide color palette and certainly its low price. Acetate, low in abrasion-resistance, good in color, and fairly good in resilience considering its low price, can be fortified in a blend with nylon's virtues.

But a blend is effective only if the fibers are used in sufficient quantity to make their benefits felt. Ask what percentages of fibers have been used. When you know their weaknesses and strengths, you have some basis for judging the wearing quality of the blend. To date there are no official standards that dictate what the fiber proportions should be in all blends. But blends with nylon, the most frequently used blending fiber, should contain a minimum of 20% nylon if its advantages are to come across. A blend of 30% nylon with 70% wool has become almost a standard with good manufacturers.

It has been predicted that in ten years nearly all soft floor coverings will be made of synthetics, owing to a world-wide shortage of topnotch carpet wool and the constant development of synthetics.

As a guide to your purchasing, here is a rundown on the kind of performance you can generally expect of the fibers currently used in rugs and carpets.

(Note that we say "generally," for there is hardly a synthetic that hasn't variations within its own family group. There are several types of rayon, acetate, nylon, and acrylic, and there's no telling when other fiber families will be showing up in carpets. Experimentation and development are continuous, change is constant, weaknesses are being eliminated, and virtues enhanced. But that's the big contribution of synthetic fibers to our living—their ability to be engineered to the specific use they're intended for.)

peting. A good carpet wool measures up well on almost all major counts—resilience, resistance to abrasion and soil, and cleanability. Its well-known shortcoming is that moths like it, but now moth-preventive treatments during carpet manufacture cope with this pretty satisfactorily. It takes dye well in all but the palest and most brilliant colors, and one of its greatest attributes is that carpets of every construction and texture can be made of it. You will notice that the most interesting-looking effects usually show up in wool.

The word to the wise, however, is that the virtues noted above belong to good wool carpeting. This is constructed of yarns that have been blended from a variety of imported wools. They come from different species of sheep in many parts of the world, each chosen for a particular characteristic—like toughness, resilience, easy dye-ability. You will of course not get the full benefits of wool if inferior, limp wool or reprocessed wool is used. And even with good wool you can get a poor wool carpet if the maker has skimped on the amount of material used.

Good wool is not inexpensive. If you have a choice between a cheap, poorly made wool carpet and a well-made synthetic of similar price, the synthetic is generally a preferable buy.

And this brings up a test for fiber quantity which you should apply to any carpet, no matter what it's made of. A good wearing surface is not so much a matter of deep pile as it is of close tufting. When you put a carpet in a 180° fold, it should not "grin," meaning that its tufts should be so close together that the carpet backing cannot easily be seen.

Cotton

Cotton's great assets are the ease with which it takes color and its low price. It can give you lots of colorful style and service for your money as long as you don't try to make it do the work of tougher, more resilient materials. As anyone who has lived with a braided rag rug can attest, a cotton rug can be durable, particularly in flat constructions and if its yarns are tightly twisted. It is not a very resilient fiber, doesn't bounce back, so a plushlike pile will present the problem of tracking and matting if you subject it to constant traffic. The deep, shaggy piles, which look disordered by design, camouflage this. But the fuzzy fibers of cotton tend to trap soil and show it. Some cotton rugs are treated in manufacture to lessen this. Tweedy mixtures of color are another dodge for covering up soil. On the credit side, cotton takes plant cleaning beautifully. Moral is to use cotton where traffic is light and chances of soiling are minimal.

Rayon

We are assured by the technologists that you can't judge present-day rayon carpeting by rayon's questionable performances in the past. A lot has been done to improve carpet rayon and—most important—to use it in appropriate constructions and applications where its good points shine and its lesser qualities don't create problems. American Viscose, for example, has developed a rayon carpet fiber called Avisco "Super-L" which is an improvement in some major respects on regular carpet rayon.

Regular rayon's big advantages are its range of bright, clear colors, its resistance to most household stains, and its low cost, which gives you style at a price. Its fibers are smooth, as most synthetic fibers are, but indented, so they tend to pick up soil. Again, like most synthetic fibers, it has a luster. By some optical phenomenon lustrous fibers show up soil more than dull ones. This is overcome to some degree in rayon by delustering processes. Rayon is generally easy to spot-clean, however. Its weak-sister aspects are its only fair resilience and abrasion resistance, so it presents problems of matting and limited durability. But these drawbacks are not so obvious if the carpet is made of loop or twisted yarns in a dense weave or tuft, rather than with a cut pile. If you use it where traffic is light, if you're satisfied with a few years of wear, and if your budget is light, regular rayon can be a satisfactory choice.

Avisco "Super-L" shares all regular rayon's virtues plus much improved springback, resiliency, and general durability. It tops regular rayon in soil resistance, too, because the fiber is designed to be round and smooth, without indentations. Delustered fiber is specially soil-resistant. You'll get best service from densely woven or tufted carpets with a loop pile rather than a cut pile.

At its price, it's a good buy for places of moderate traffic—as long s you don't expect to make an eirloom of it. "Super-L" can be sed alone or blended with wool, ylon, or acrylic. The makers of ne fiber permit carpet manufacurers to tag their goods with the Avisco "Integrity Label" only if ne finished product uses the fiber ppropriately.

Acetate

Good clear color and the fact nat it's the most resilient of the ow-cost fibers are acetate's chief laims to fame. It fends off soiling retty well, too, especially if it's een given a delustering, and leans easily. Its major shortcomng is brittleness, which puts a 00% acetate carpet out of the unning if you're looking for somehing that must take much abrasive ear. Carpet with twisted loop pile onstruction has the best chance of etaining its good appearance. Aceate is not affected by mildew, noths, or most stains, but does nelt in acetone, which is the base f some nail-polish removers. It's fiber that takes happily to blendng with other fibers. Blended with ylon, for instance, it gives you the dvantage of its luxurious loftiness upported by nylon's abrasion-reistance and durability, at comparatively low price.

Celanese has developed an aceate fiber called "Celaire," with a ermanent heat-set twist which imroves acetate's resiliency. As an ssurance of quality to the conumer, manufacturers who make arpets of this fiber are required o submit their goods for tests on ile weight, soilage, color fastness, brasion-resistance, and texture reention after shampooing before hey can use the "Celaire" label.

Nylon

If you study one of these technical "comparative property" harts that evaluate the behavior f one fiber as opposed to another, nylon outstrips all other fibers in abrasion-resistance, toughness, and reluctance to wear out. In cut-pile carpets it can't quite match wool's well-known resilience and bounceback after crushing. However, its resilience is excellent when the fiber is used in tight loop carpets. Hardly any stain will actually destroy the fiber, but soil does show up when lustrous fibers are used.

That is one reason why a lot of technical attention has been paid to processes for delustering nylon, and with good success. It spot-cleans and plant-cleans very well. It is non-allergenic and unattractive to moths and, like all synthetics except rayon, isn't attacked by mildew (but bear in mind that the backing of a carpet may mildew if not dried after wet staining). You can see why nylon deserves prime consideration if your carpeting needs involve an area that is subject to lots of traffic and if you want to invest in long-term durability. It is about the equivalent of good wool in price.

Blends of 30% nylon and 70% wool have been found very satisfactory and are good demonstrations of two fibers supporting and enhancing each other's performance. Fortunately nylon is blendable with less costly rayon and acetate, too, so that even on a budget you can enjoy some of its major benefits. But remember that the greater quantity of nylon in a blend, the better the durability.

This induces us to issue a warning word. Of all the synthetics nylon has enjoyed the most glamorous reputation and probably endured the greatest abuse at the hands of unscrupulous manufacturers anxious to cash in on the magic name. Carpets have been called nylon that had so little nylon in them the fiber's presence was hardly detectable. But nylon's name probably suffered most from the poor performance of carpets made from re-used or waste nylon that might have originally been intended for clothing or draperies and never designed to be used in floor covering.

As a consumer you should know that synthetic fibers are not created in the same form, weight, and texture for wearing apparel, say, as for carpets, any more than the same kind of wool yarns are used for suiting as are used for carpeting. Very heavy weights of nylon have been developed especially for carpeting by American Enka, Chemstrand, du Pont, and Industrial Rayon Corp., which calls theirs "IRC New Nylon 22."

To help put this message across, du Pont offers a labeling program to manufacturers who make all-nylon carpets. They may tag their goods with a label that reads "Made of 100% du Pont Carpet Nylon" only when it is indeed what has been used. The manufacturers sign a contractual agreement and submit their carpets for testing.

Acrylics

Acrylic fibers, the newest to come into floor covering, are said to be the test tube's closest approach to natural protein fibers—meaning wool and fur. Acrylic carpeting certainly feels more like wool than any other synthetic carpeting. The fibers are soft and warm, and light in weight. (Those simulated fur coats are usually made of fibers in the acrylic family, as are furry throw rugs.) The acrylics used in carpeting are better known to you as "Acrilan," "Creslan," "Dynel," and "Verel." "Dynel" and "Verel" are modified acrylics (modacrylics), differing from the others in some characteristics. All have certain properties peculiar to themselves, like differences in weight, reaction to heat and flame, and varying degrees of strength and resilience. All acrylics rate high on these last two counts.

All synthetics, except rayon, are hydrophobic—meaning that they tend to repel moisture. All acrylics are remarkable for this. Water will not cause the fibers themselves to shrink, and soil does not cling readily to them. None is attacked by mildew or moths, although moths may attack protein stains on some acrylics. Generally their fibers are not damaged by acids and oils in usual household stains. They spot-clean and plant-clean easily and well, keeping their softness and texture.

All are sensitive to high heat. It is recommended that they should not be cleaned with hot water or dried with hot air. Their reactions vary in degree according to the fiber. "Acrilan" will burn and flame, but not readily in densely woven, heavy-pile construction. Avoid carpets with loose, lofty pile.

"Dynel" and "Verel" do not support combustion. All the acrylics blend well with wool and with each other. All are definite candidates for carpeting that must take heavy wear and is prone to soil and staining. They are in much the same price bracket as wool and nylon.

The Chemstrand Corporation, makers of the acrylic fiber used in "Acrilan" carpeting, set up standards for the use of this fiber by carpet manufacturers. In order to carry the "Acrilan" label, carpets must be of appropriate construction and contain no less than 70% of "Acrilan." In blends, the blending fibers must be either carpet wool or fibers that have certain low degrees of moisture absorption.

"Dynel" is made by Union Carbide Corporation; "Verel" by Eastman Chemical Products; and "Creslan" by American Cyanamid Company.

Textured-filament carpeting

You are not alone in your bewilderment if the words "textured filaments" mean nothing to you. They are not a chemical family of fibers. They are a new and pretty wondrous form that certain synthetic fibers can be made to take by a variety of different mechanical and chemical processes. Some experts see them as revolutionizing the carpet industry.

To you their practical meaning is that they eliminate the fuzzing, pilling, and sprouting of loose ends of carpet yarns; they can make carpets more resistant to soil and easier to clean; they can improve feel and appearance; they can make possible a dizzying number of textured effects in carpets (estimated at 45,759); and in time they should lower manufacturing costs and so lower carpet prices.

Carpet wool has always been the model that synthetic carpet fibers have followed. Carpet mills knew how to handle wool and had the equipment for working with it, so from their beginnings the synthetics were designed to behave as much like wool as possible during the manufacture of carpets.

You know how wool comes off the sheep—in fluffy bunches of fiber that has to be combed, straightened out, and spun into yarn before it can be woven. Synnetic fibers come out of their hemical vats as fine. smooth. continuous single filaments. But in rder to make these synthetic fibers ool-like. the long smooth filaments ad to be chopped into shorter engths. fuzzed together like fleece. hen put through the same carding. ombing. and yarn-spinning proc-sses as natural wool. In other ords. before the synthetics could cquire woolly behavior. a straight ber had to be deliberately tangled nto what is called "staple" and hen straightened out again!

The big news in the carpet busi-ess within the last few years is hat several methods have been per-ected to give the skinny filament bers the loftiness and texture of ool without having to go through ll those expensive and seemingly logical steps of making staple. Keeping their filament form. fibers an be permanently "bulked." rimped. looped. curled. or coiled o simulate wool-like textures. Twisted together into yarns. the laments are then ready to be oven or tufted into carpet.

The advantages are that filament s stronger than staple. and carpet oven with one continuous filament as no loose. short ends to work ut on the carpet surface as it s walked on. Consequently there's o fuzzing and pilling of excess ber. as there may be in carpet ade of staple. And the filament, extured though it appears. is ac-ually still a smooth fiber to which oil doesn't cling readily.

Bulking and texturizing of fila-ent are still relatively new. for lament yarns require different arpet-making machinery. Bulking rocesses have been given to ray-n (American Enka's "Skyloft"), o acetate (Eastman Chemical's Chromspun" and Celanese "Cela-erm"). American Viscose's "Avi-ron" is a textured rayon filament.

Textured filament nylon is espe-ially worth looking into because. eside the advantages mentioned bove, the process improves the ber's resilience. This brings nylon ne step farther toward the perfec-on no single fiber yet has.

Allied Chemical's "Caprolan" (a ype of nylon that can be made in eavy weight and has superior col-ring qualities) and du Pont's Nylon 501" are the two texturized laments you hear most about in arpeting. although Industrial ayon Corp. and Chemstrand are lso producing texturized filament ylon.

To bear in mind: Names of bulk-ng and texturizing processes you ill hear mentioned are du Pont's Taslan." Deering-Milliken's "Agi-on," Textured Yarn Co.'s "Ty-cora." Joseph Bancroft's "Banlon," and "Spunize." and "Mylast." All are not identical. and sometimes a fiber may be given a combination of bulking and texturizing treatments.

In general

The dyeing and color fastness of synthetics. which used to be a problem in their early days. is now considered by the industry to have been solved. All fibers are different in their ability to take color but types of dyes have been developed to take care of each individual case. Solution-dyed fibers, meaning those that are colored as the fiber is actually made instead of being given a dye bath later. tend to keep their color longer. but they do not offer a broad range of color. The most frequently solution-dyed fibers are rayon (like Avisco's "Colorspun") and acetate ("Chromspun" and "Celaperm"), although both of these fibers dye exceptionally well with usual methods.

Many synthetics. especially those that are moisture-resistant, and even wool itself have the curious facility of creating static electricity. This is usually most obvious when a rug or carpet is new. and on cold. dry days when the humidity is low. Static is not usual in the presence of moisture. and it varies with individuals.

Besides being annoying, static tends to attract dust. We are told static is less likely in loop-pile than in cut-pile carpets. Anti-static agents can be sprayed on a carpet during cleaning but are not completely satisfactory. The experts say that home application of anti-statics is not recommended because few of us can spread the spray evenly. Some carpet fibers are now being treated with antistat during dyeing. The most effective solution to date seems to be to step up the humidity of a room. It is said that house plants are an aid to this.

We discuss the cleaning of carpets at length. starting on page 126. But it is not easy when you're buying a carpet to foresee how it will clean. One ray of assurance comes from the cleanability label of the National Institute of Rug Cleaning. which you may look for on the back of a carpet. This means that the manufacturer has submitted samples of the carpet to the Institute for cleaning tests. that the carpet has passed the tests satisfactorily. and the methods used have been noted. Your rug cleaner. if he is a member of the Institute. can get detailed instructions on the proper cleaning procedures to follow for this particular carpet.

know about—Nevis, St. Kitts, St. Martin, Saba. Another foursome did their private cruising through the American and British Virgin Islands. Another set of kindred souls sailed out of Nassau and concentrated on Out Island fishing in the Bahamas.

The experienced tell us that there are all sorts and sizes of boats available, but reservations for winter and spring charter should be made no later than September or October, they're that much in demand. Rates seem to run from around $300 a week to $900, depending upon grandeur and accommodations. Cost of food, fuel and ice is usually extra.

For more information in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, U. S. A., write Colonel (yes, Colonel) Frew Henry, owner of the 83-foot "Windsom," Blue Water Cruises, Box 748; and Captain Bob Crytser, owner of the sailing yacht "Electra," at Caribbean Charter and Sales, Inc., Box 1687. Both are at Yacht Haven Charlotte Amalie.

In the Bahamas, write Durward Knowles, Nassau Yacht Haven, Box 1216, for a list of craft available and their rates.

You might also investigate next season's offering of Lake Forest Travel, Lake Forest, Ill. Last spring they took eight people on a 12-day yacht cruise through the Bahamas aboard the "Gulliver" out of Nassau, at rates that ran about $420 per each.

And if you'd like to dwell on all this a little longer—till next summer, perhaps—charters are available then, too. After a few recent summer-time peregrinations in the Virgin Islands and the Bahamas, we can vouch for them being as balmy and wind-swept in summer as in winter, and a good deal more leisurely. The tourist cha-cha has slowed down to a walk, the natives are going quietly about their business (or vacationing somewhere else), the foliage is at its most blooming, the hotels are delightfully uncrowded and the rates practically painless. In the Virgin Islands we found summer life specially idyllic on St. John at the Caneel Bay Plantation. In the Bahamas, our vote goes for French Leave on Eleuthera and the Andros Club on Andros, both not-too-distant plane hops from Nassau. All, of course, open in winter, too.

One of our more fastidious friends, a world traveler and one who not only visits foreign places but arranges her life so she can live in them for some time, is back on the domestic scene, ecstatic about the service she's been experiencing on American long-distance buses. "All you need," she writes, "is time, for they are economically extraordinary; your baggage is always with you and easy to find when the trip ends. Greyhound impressed her on a trip that took her from New Orleans to Kansas City, from Des Moines to Milwaukee to Chicago and then to Philadelphia, via a Super-Greyhound, whose service she declares is delightful—no changing, superhighways and lovely country all the way.

Cape Cod autumn meals

You feel as if you've done something special, they tell us, if on an evening in early fall, you dine at Latham's on Route 6A near Brewster on The Cape. (Cape Cod, Mass., of course, for as the New Englanders say, is there another?) It's a place where they specialize in bisques, duck, rice croquettes, sumptuous desserts, and you must reserve well in advance and leave plenty of time for eating. Fall is a rare, golden time on The Cape and this tree-shaded whit house makes you feel like a personal guest (cocktails are served in the living room).

Overnight accommodations for eight, much in demand. The Dennis Playhouse is about 20 minutes away; other small amateur theaters in Brewster, Orleans.

The Wequasset Inn, overlooking Pleasant Bay on Route 28 between Chatham and Orleans, has its own share of aficionados, too, who recommend it for a fall vacation as well as for very good New England meals. It seems to be one of those places that restore the faith of travelers who have grown so callous to mediocrity that a gracious and well run hostelry nearly floors them. Accommodations are in cottages and the inn is open into October, which, if you don't know takes you through the season of crisp sunny mornings with bayberry and sea plum scent.

All year round the Rof-M Lodge at South Sandwich keeps a hunting-fishing camp hospitality available to members. Its appeal is its disarming, unobtrusively elegant comfort. In November it's mecca for the duck-shooting crowd and for the family on Thanksgiving and New Year's.

WHAT MAKES A HOME?

Mrs. Douglas says:

used to beg me to spend less time keeping the house spick and span and to spend more time on leisure activities. Now we give the main parts of the house a weekly cleaning and a daily pick-up, and my husband keeps hoping I'll find time to clean the attic and basement more often.

What happened during those years in between? I learned that I was wearing myself out needlessly. My husband and children are happier in a house where they feel comfortable, where they can enjoy their various interests without worrying about keeping the place hospital-clean.

I still don't like a house that's not neat, but it is much more important that I keep from being tired and cross and that they all think of home as a comfortable place—the place they like best to be. There are times when people come in and I'm not proud of the way things look, but I am proud of a happy, interesting family. And if friends like us for ourselves, they come again.

The preparation of tempting dishes and beautiful table settings are still important to me, but many is the time we eat a stew in the kitchen. I still dress up each day before my family comes home to dinner, but that doesn't mean that I haven't appeared at other times in blue jeans with my hair disarranged and a smudge on my face.

BUDGETING didn't turn out to be a breeze either. As our income increased, so did the demands. After years of trying to budget, one's mind just naturally allots so much money to each category of the fixed expenses, so that there is little need for pencil-and-paper work in that department any longer. It's the un-fixed expenses that are always throwing me off balance.

These un-fixed expenses are constantly changing and always increasing, it seems. It is interesting to see how books, magazines, records, musical instruments, music lessons and summer camps have taken on more and more importance until they have threatened to crowd out adult parties, the theater, and all thoughts of a new car this year.

Speaking of parties, there is another way we have changed, too. We used to have big parties, as well as smaller dinner parties once or twice a week, and we were in turn frequently entertained. As we became more involved in church, school, and community activities our friends and acquaintances became numerous. Although we always find something to like in everyone, we have learned through the years that it is possible to have only a few really close friends.

Now we are trying to curtail all but a few important outside activities and to concentrate upon spending more time with our best friends. We have found that this method helps to make us more composed and happy; gives us more time to enjoy our hobbies and participate in family life, in addition to enjoying our close friends.

THE business of married life being a never-ending date is true, yet it is not true. Constant companionship and physical affection can be stifling and as unwholesome as a diet composed of dessert alone. Still, there is always the knowledge that there is someone close by, someone who cares, some one person you'd rather be with than anyone else in the world.

In addition to the children, what then remains unchanged of my original goal? Only consideration and kindness, and even those qualities have taken on more meaning as we realize that thoughtfulness and a respect for each person as an individual is the basis of a happy home. This is mature love.

If I were to add more to this formula for a happy home, as I now see it, I would first have to admit that we are a long way from attaining this goal ourselves. There are many failures for every single success. However, that need not keep us from striving to attain the satisfaction we seek.

In my opinion, in a successful home there is the opportunity for each family member to follow individual creative interests to his greatest possible potential, just so long as interests of one member do not bring unhappiness to the others.

In an ideal home each member is aware that he is important, because he has received much more praise and appreciation than criticism, and because of the lighthearted warmth and affection in that home. In this atmosphere members feel free to bring their problems to the others for help in solving. Groundless tears are soon allayed, and when real mistakes have been made courage and coaching are received for righting the wrongs. I know that I am a better person than I otherwise would be because of the faith my husband has in me, and the fact that my children are proud of me. I like to think that the same holds true for each member of the family.

And finally, the ideal home would be a religious home. I'm not referring so much to religious forms as to a belief in God, a devotion to truth, and a constant effort to live one's religion by doing everything possible to make this a better world.

Mr. Douglas says:

Mounted birds decorate every corner of my bedroom. I have one gripe in this department, however. Mother won't let me keep dead birds in the refrigerator until I get around to work on them, even though they are all wrapped up in aluminum foil. Like Dad says, she keeps chickens and other meat in there that have been dead a lot longer than the birds I find.

My room is not only full of stuffed birds, dozens and dozens of books, and one kind of live animal or another, but I have many shelves of animal models that I have either bought or made from clay, plasticine, yarns, etc. This makes it necessary for me to clean my own room, but I don't mind. No one else could do it.

Speaking of rooms, I think, if it can be arranged at all, each child in the family should have a room of his own. Not to be used as a garage for the night, but as sort of a little home in itself. A fellow needs a little privacy once in a while, a quiet place to study or dream, and a place where his valuables can be kept unmolested.

Money was one of the main topics of argument in our family until we hit upon the budget plan in our family powwows. Now my sister and I are given the money that was formerly spent on us and we have to budget it to cover everything but food eaten at home, and doctors' and dentists' bills. It doesn't do us any good to put on a big production about an "emergency," we don't get any more money. So we have learned to do a pretty careful job of planning, and we both have found various outside jobs to furnish extra cash for extra needs.

The family council is very important in our family. It is here that we make rules for using the telephone, TV, and record player; plan vacations, make out our daily schedules, and decide how often to spend evenings away from home and how late we should stay out. We learn the income and expenses of the family, and gain the knowledge of the work that needs to be done around the house, garage, and yard. With the sharing of money goes the sharing of work, and as much as possible we are invited to choose jobs.

I'm just finishing a course in driver's education and will soon have a driver's license. Then I suppose there will be plenty of problems about using the car. I know from experience that in a family you have to learn to give and take. Such as with recordings, for example. I like symphonies. My sister calls it "long hair" because she likes rock-and-roll. She's willing to let me play my kind of music, but then I have to put up with her kind too. I suppose when it comes to using the car, I'll have to be prepared to give in some way for the privilege of taking it. If it means carting my young sister and her giggling friends around, it may not be worth it.

I'm going to miss my family when I go away to college or into the Armed Services. In spite of the fact that they bawl me out before hearing my side of the story. I know they like me—even when they don't like everything I do. Someday, when I get a home of my own, I am going to help it grow into one a lot like this one that I live in right now.

Jean Douglas says:

often. These would include picnics, swimming, ice-skating, rides through the country, trips to zoos and museums, and visits to the homes of friends.

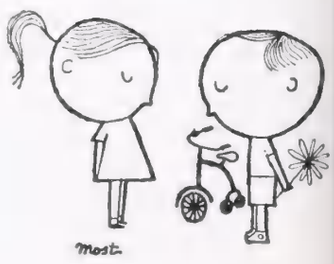
Although we usually have a big vacation each year, I think our family should take more small trips. But there is a reason why we haven't. Dad is busy teaching during the school year, and often, like this year, he takes a summer job as soon as the University closes. On Saturdays he has a great many things to do in his study or in his workshop, and on Sundays there is church, and he likes to read and get some rest, too. Also, we are all in so many outside activities that one or more of us has some sort of appointment to keep almost every week-end. Still, we do find time for picnics and quite a bit of skating and swimming—and I wish we did more.

Another thing an ideal family would do is to work together on projects. We used to do this a lot. For instance, we always all helped clean the basement and did the yard work together. We even painted the outside of our house, with Dad doing the biggest share. Here again, activities interfere and keep us from doing as many family projects as we once did. But we do play games together, listen to TV together, and clean the house on Saturday.

If the family is to be the right kind of a one, it would need to have meetings to discuss things the family is involved in. We call our meetings family powwows, and we discuss allowances, home responsibilities, bedtimes, etc.

Before we got our TV, our dad and mother wanted to be sure it would not interfere with eating and sleeping, our studying and other work. So we made rules about when it was to be turned on and off, and what type of programs we were to see. I like our powwows.

I think, if the budget allows, each member of the family should have his or her own room. We are lucky enough to have a bedroom for each child and Dad and Mother each has a study. There are times when you want to be alone, and your own room is a good place to go.



I believe any good home would have a certain amount of religion. In our home, we try to put religion in our lives. We try to treat others the way we'd like to be treated; we try to solve problems by asking what is the right thing to do, not the easy or the popular thing to do.

I think that in an understanding home parents are interested in their children's schools and what they do there. I am glad my father has been on the school board and I'm glad that both my parents do a lot of PTA work and that they like all our teachers. Dad and mother help us with our homework, too. They won't do it for us, but they check it over and tell us if it is wrong.

You can see that I am quite satisfied with the way we do things around here. I just have one or two questions that I can't understand. When my brother and I argue, our parents say, "Stop quarreling." But when they argue and I tell them about it, they say it was just a discussion. It sounds the same to me.

Another thing is that when I do something my parents don't like and they get after me for it, I tell them that it is perfectly normal, that I read Gesell's new book on Youth and I'm doing just what he says an average thirteen-year-old usually does. And then they say, "That doesn't mean you have to do it, does it?" You'd think they'd be glad I am normal.

Really, I believe it is because I am normal that I think they are doing a fairly good job of bringing us up and they rate quite high.

TREE PEONIES ARE NO LONGER A GAMBLE

From Japan, where tree peony culture amounts to worship, have come graceful plants with single and semi-double flowers held above attractive foliage. This one is fringed scarlet with yellow stamens.

northern regions, it must have a cool resting period to form flower buds, but it is grown commercially in Alabama only twenty miles from the Gulf.

In New England, plants brought to this country after Perry entered Japan still thrive in old gardens and show the natural adaptability of the shrubs to this country.

Basic soil, too, seems a minor matter of concern as long as it is well drained. Though there may be an advantage to neutral or slightly acid soil, the essentials are good drainage and fertility.

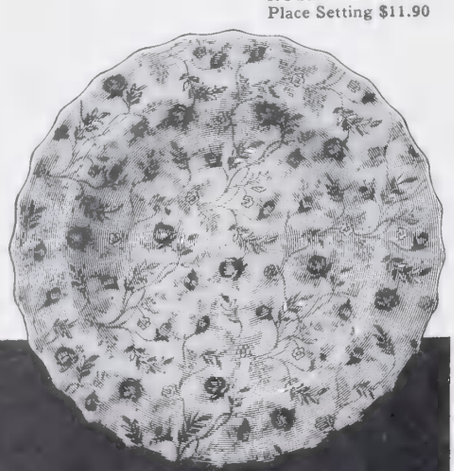
Bear in mind that the tree peony is an extremely long-lived shrub. When you plant one, you are, in the words of the late Professor A. P. Saunders, "planting for all time, or at least, all of your time."

Prepare the planting hole so that the roots will have a foot or more of nourishing soil to penetrate as years go by. A liberal lacing of humus (leaf mould is ideal, but peat does nicely), especially in sandy soil, and a complete fertilizer should be mixed into the soil that is to fill the planting hole. A handful of lime may be needed in acid-soil areas. Contrary to much advice, manure can be mixed into the soil below the root level at planting time.

Although tree peonies have been successfully planted during every month of the year, by far the best time is during the brief dormant period in early fall. Growers ship them from late August through October so that the roots can be planted in time to develop good growth before cold weather. The plants begin to bloom in spring about two weeks ahead of the herbaceous kinds, with some of the newer and later-flowering kinds overlapping them by a week or so. The flowers last longer, of course, if the sun doesn't beat down on them day after day. Peony fanciers sometimes adapt the Japanese practice of shading choice blooms with parasols during hot weather.

One of the most significant discoveries in tree peony culture was made by Harold Wolfe, an amateur gardener, who, upon seeing his first memorable flower, was so impressed he dedicated himself to making the plant available to all. Wolfe found that, established recommendations notwithstanding, tree peonies should be planted deeply, with the crown of the plant four to six inches below the surface of the ground. The best depth depends somewhat on the size of the plant and the texture of the soil—the deeper planting is particularly advantageous in sandy soils and where high summer temperatures bake the surface for long periods.

Deep planting stimulates the development of an extensive root system, below-ground buds on the scion (the section of a desirable plant which is grafted onto a vigorous root) and consequently, much more rapid growth above ground. When plants have been deeply set, they can take all manner of surface abuse, even burning or cutting off at the ground, and still send up new shoots.



Wolfe's second discovery was that in his sun-scorched Belleville,

Illinois, garden a deep mulch of sawdust, coffee grounds, even stones, brought a strongly favorable response from the plants. With the soil kept relatively cool and moisture conserved, tree peonies could be grown in full sun as well as in light shade.

The only precaution needed was to mix ammonium nitrate into the sawdust, at the rate of one teaspoon per bushel, when the mulch was later worked into the soil. This made up for the temporary tie-up of nitrogen while the sawdust decayed.

Where summers are not as hot and dry as in the Midwest, mulches may not be needed, although they have been proved unquestionably conducive to good root growth. In humid areas or locations with less than ideal air circulation, a mulch may complicate disease control by harboring spores of the fungi. However, spraying the insulating layer with ferbam usually takes care of this. If mice or other small pests are a problem in the garden, a mulch may increase their menace, which must be weighed against its advantages. More and more, gardeners are voting for the mulches. In any event, a mulch the first winter after planting is desirable to prevent heaving by frost.

Another solution to the root protection problem is a natural cover of low vegetation. This has aesthetic advantages too, for what could be more attractive than a well-grown peony with its foliage displayed against a dark green carpet of vinca or pachysandra? Or, in the partial shade which encourages taller growth, gnarled peony branches pushing through a light undercover of dwarf shrubs, as they did in the wild? However, when tree roots occupy the same soil, peonies fare poorly, so judgment is needed when a semi-shady site is being considered.

There once seemed good reason for keeping tree peonies isolated in sunny, cleanly cultivated plots. Botrytis and the other dramatic blights, which overnight may destroy the growth of several years, thrive in close, moist situations. But the gardener at last has a potent weapon for them in ferbam. When used as directed (three applications at intervals of two weeks), it will prevent infestation. With the protection of this chemical more new shoots, and consequently more flowers, are able to develop.

If plants have been seriously attacked, the entire ground area around them should be sprayed heavily in late fall after old leaves and debris have been gathered and burned. It does no harm either to spray both plant and soil when setting out new peonies. If this seems a bother, remember that your efforts will be bountifully repaid.

Fortunately, insects are seldom troublesome. One that does crop up from time to time is the small carpenter bee. The female of this insect bores its way through the center of woody stems to make a cache for its eggs. Since it enters only through breaks or cuts in the stems, it is a simple matter to block its passage with a carpet tack stuck in any openings if there is reason to suspect its presence.

The subject of pruning the woody stems was once covered in one word: never. But when Wolfe cut back several young plants to the ground in fall as an experiment, he found that the drastic action paid off handsomely in new shoots the next spring. Growth came more easily from the base than from the old woody branches. He has since used this technique to encourage lower and faster development of young plants.

Except for young plants, Wolfe cuts back only vigorous but ungainly shrubs that can stand the shock. He never cuts back nicely shaped specimens. With those he occasionally removes a new shoot to keep the stems from becoming an unsightly forest.

The moundlike habit of a plant which has been cut back often gives it greater value in carrying out a garden design, and although cutting may sacrifice bloom the next year, it is not unusual for the hybrids to flower generously on new stems.

How to buy tree peonies

Although tree peony stocks are not at a peak, price may still determine which plants you start out with. Whatever your budget, it pays to buy only nursery-grown plants from a reliable grower. If the low prices of young imported plants tempt you, be absolutely certain that they have been grown at least a year in this country. The mortality rate for young plants is high the first year after shipping.

Responsible growers sell plants only after they have flowered at least once in the nursery. This may take seven years or longer with plants raised from seed, and at least one nursery dealing in seed-grown plants of the Japanese type prefers to sell only ten-year-old plants. Naturally, the older it is, the more a tree peony costs.

Two- to three-year-old plants are at the lower end of the grafted-plant price scale. They seldom flower the first year after planting. Plants four or five years old usually do, and larger plants almost always do. However, peonies grow slowly and the best flowers don't begin to appear until after the plant has become well established.

Special catalog offers sometimes give the person unfamiliar with tree peonies an opportunity to buy named plants by color at lower prices than would be necessary if particular varieties were specified. Quality of such plants varies with the reputation of the grower, but this is usually a good way to begin. With more experience, the best way to choose new plants is to see them in flower. This may be in nurseries, private collections which are often opened to the public for a day or two during the peak of bloom, or the several display gardens across the country.

In the gardens where some of the old, heavy-headed, bomblike "Chinese" and "European" kinds are still grown, you will quickly note the superiority of those that came directly from Japan, without development in Europe.

The original single tree peony grew in China, but early improvements occurred largely in Japan. When tree peonies reached Europe at a much later date, a frenzy of development began there, and the resulting varieties are called European hybrids. When Americans became interested, they imported plants from both Europe and direct from Japan. The latter, which we speak of as the Japanese peonies, are still single or semi-double. Because the flowers are held proudly upright, at or above the level of the foliage, they make a better display than the nodding doubles. Also, the over-doubled flowers are not sufficiently functional to close at night and thus fade much sooner. Another disadvantage of the heavy European hybrids in this country is that they frequently burst into premature growth on warm days in late winter, only to be frozen later.

Professor Saunders began to make similar crosses in this country, resulting in more refined and upstanding hybrids. Although they have as yet proved difficult to propagate and are destined to remain costly for some time, a few are nudging the $10 mark. In colors they range from soft, dreamlike yellows through gold, rose, and luminous combinations of yellow and rose, to copper reds, dark garnets, and nighttime shades of plum and mahogany. Marvelously, even the very darkest of these flowers are vivid when seen at a distance.

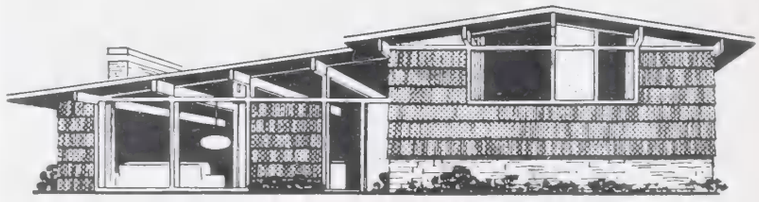
Professor Saunders's work is being carried on by his daughter Silvia at Clinton, N.Y., and by William Gratwick at Pavilion, N. Y., who has all of Saunders's seventy or so hybrids in his collection and is making them available as quickly as possible. Certain of the hybrids are also available from Mission Gardens, Techny, Illinois.

Has Your Freezer a Fever?

■ If your freezer is "running a fever" above its normal temperature of zero degrees Fahrenheit, you'd better treat it.

Mrs. Dorothy McIvor, University of Illinois foods specialist, says research by the U. S. Department of Agriculture shows that frozen foods must be kept at zero or lower in order to maintain their flavor, color, texture, and nutritional value.

Temperatures above zero, even when they're below "freezing" temperature of 32° F., won't keep foods at their best for long. The foods may stay solid and look safe, but actually they are losing quality.



A thermometer is the best way to test your freezer's temperature, but you can get a rough idea by noting the condition of ice cream. If it stays frozen hard, you can be sure that the temperature is 10° F. or lower.

If your freezer holds foods at 10° to 20° F., buy only small amounts of food at a time and use them in a few days.

If the freezer temperature is consistently above zero, call a repair man or check with the dealer. But if the temperature only occasionally rises above zero, the freezer may need defrosting, the electrical circuit may be overloaded or you may be freezing too much food from the unfrozen state.

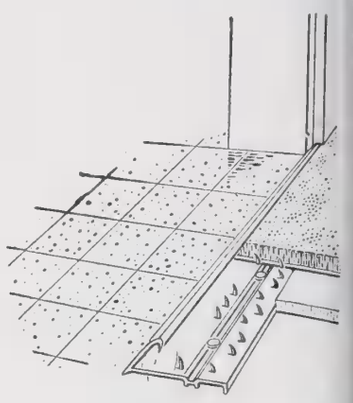
Longer life for your rugs and carpets

Little known facts that can make a big difference in the life and looks of your floor coverings

By JULIE POLSHEK

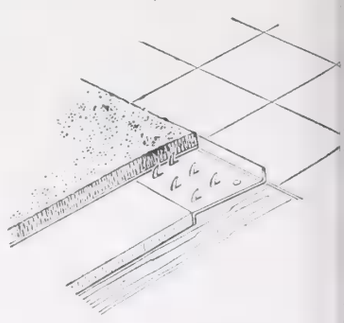
Don't put leftover pieces of carpeting on top of other carpets to protect them against wear, unless you put a piece of felt between. Carpet backing harms the nap below. Danger spots can be protected only by rugs with soft backings.

Dents caused by furniture standing too long in one place can sometimes be removed by steaming (with a steam iron held at a short distance), as you rub with spoon.



In carpeting stairways, insist that the installer use an extra thickness of padding at the nose of the steps to help stave off wear at these areas. Also ask for an invisible fold of spare carpeting that allows subsequent shifting to relocate worn spots.

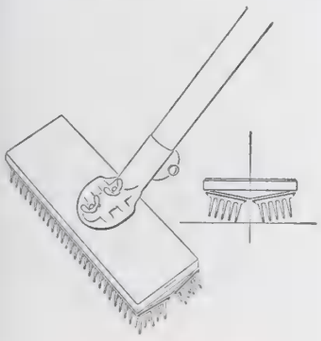
If your rug label does not indicate that it has been moth-proofed, have it done by a professional.



Metal hairpin legs can badly dent your carpeting. The solution to the problem is a metal glide (above) that snaps on to the hairpin turn.

Authorities on Oriental rugs recommend an underlay or rug pad of 100% hair (about 38-ounce weight) for large rugs; for runners and small rugs that need anchoring, slab-rubber no thicker than ¼".

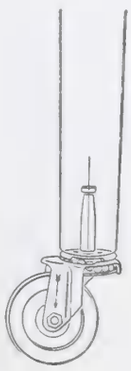
Worn edges can be conceale with a metal binder bar (above) similar to metal tack strips use along walls. The principal differ ence is a lip which covers the to of rug with a narrow metal rim This edging is indispensable wher carpeting adjoins a hard surfac that must be scrubbed (such a linoleum or vinyl tile), since th rim protects carpet from slop-ove For hearth edges or at doorways exposed edges can be protected b metal trim (below) that does no overlap carpet.



Frayed or worn rug edges shoul have prompt attention. Reinforc with paper and rayon-scrim tap holding rows of tiny metal teet that grasp rug back. Tape is ap plied with latex adhesive that sea and strengthens edge from beneath

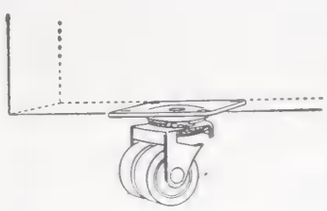
A clear polyethylene coaster that fits under tub-type planters is completely concealed but protects carpet from moisture.

Guard carpeting against parched air, a prevalent heating-season situation. If the air in your room is not at the correct relative humidity, it draws moisture from textile fibers just as it does from wood surfaces. The result can be damaging to carpet fibers and even shorten carpet life.



This brush is called a "pilater." Its plastic teeth keep carpet pile brushed upright. Used periodically, it lengthens wear expectancy by directing the impact of foot traffic on tuft ends instead of on sides.

Good underlay pads make rugs and carpets more comfortable underfoot, sometimes help anchor them to the floor, but, most important of all, they serve as a buffer against wear and actually prolong carpet life. There are more types available today than ever before. In addition to the 100% hair, hair and felt, and slab rubber types, there are molded and flat latex, foam latex (flat or rippled), and polyurathene foam. Foot comfort and rug thickness should govern your choice. Before buying carpet, try it with a piece of the underlay you have in mind to make sure the team is right for your comfort preference. A good rule of thumb is a thin pad for a thick carpet and a thick pad for a thin one. Resilience and buoyancy are a very good thing if not overdone.



Imperfect casters on furniture can almost chew up carpet pile. Those on beds moved daily for making are especially apt to produce wear. The safest thing is to replace any casters on furniture you buy with the best available. Only plastic wheels are safe for nap surfaces. There are many kinds ranging from light-duty crystal polystyrene for serving carts to super-duty wheels molded of high-impact phenolics used for pianos. Rubber wheels, although best on hard floors, can leave marks on carpeting, and also impede the casters' swivel action on rugs, causing friction and twisting out the pile. Free swivel action is absolutely necessary on pile surfaces.

For heavy furniture that is frequently moved, don't settle for a wheel that is less than two inches in diameter and one inch in tread width. You can best protect your carpet investment by using casters having ball bearings that operate on two levels (above). You pay about $4.50 for a set of four of this type compared to a possible $1.50 for the conventional type of ball-bearing casters. Price is your safest guide in buying. For maximum efficiency you can use the piano caster (below) that distributes weight over the broadest possible area. These are especially suitable for glideway beds. Any frequently moved beds should have casters. But when making beds each day, try to vary their path slightly, however, to protect the carpeting in this area.

DRAWINGS BY WALTER HORTENS

If carpeting loses its tautness, humid weather may be responsible. In this case the situation should correct itself. If not, have the installation inspected without delay to see if re-stretching is necessary. Neglected slack can result in ripple scar that is difficult to erase. A slack fit also increases the wear from foot traffic.

For carpet longevity be sure your installation is checked after two or three months to see if re-stretching is needed. With tack strips, re-stretching can be done without harm to carpet.

COMING IN THE OCTOBER ISSUE

Your Heritage from Frank Lloyd Wright

- In one of the most significant issues it has ever published House Beautiful evaluates the work and the living influence of America's master designer—the man who has elevated architecture to equal status with the other fine arts of music and poetry.
- Our October issue shows you how you, in your living, can benefit from the principles he built by.
- In the work of other architects who understand the powerful philosophy of Frank Lloyd Wright, you will see how this vigorous tradition has already taken deep root. You will see how poetry is possible in all materials and in all phases of daily life. You will see how Wright's perceptions of space have been changing the concept of physical shelter into the concept of spiritual environment, so that life within a man-made structure can be a joyful communion with beauty.
- These are the principles that are already shaping the truly livable architecture of the 20th Century. They are Frank Lloyd Wright's legacy to all of us. They are yours for the understanding. You will find them interpreted in this notable issue, waiting for you to apply to your own living.

PROVENCE—A TRAVELER'S DREAM

distances and the trunk roads that carry so many tourists through it in their race from Paris to the sea, Provence remains almost virgin travel ground. With its density of old hill towns knit together by an excellent system of back roads, it is an inexhaustible delight for the walker or for the driver who likes to improvise. The towns are small and unspoiled, the inns plentiful and good, the air of the countryside is an aromatic honey-colored element peopled with innumerable relics of Rome, the Middle Ages, and the Renaissance.

Provence cannot be seen in three days on the way to Cannes or Nice. It should be seen whole, as a composition, a work of art—unique, strong, and full. In its luminous, mystical plains and mountain strongholds, on hilltops and along its lush shore, the art and craft of twenty-five centuries endure, with a wholeness and continuity unequaled elsewhere in Europe.

Long before France was France, Provence was a center of force and culture. Its Greek and Roman cities were powers in the Mediterranean world: its fortified towns—now half-forgotten hill villages—were the cores of great feudal kingdoms; its Mediaeval center, Avignon, was the cultural and religious heart of the western world. Aix, with its elegant mansions of rose-pink stone, was one of the great cities of southern Europe in the 17th and 18th Centuries. Today it is the loveliest city of France after Paris. And even before the Greeks came to settle, around 600 B.C., there was a vigorous Ligurian-Celtic civilization here, whose sculpture and artifacts (now in the museums of Aix and Marseille) have been found in excavations at Entremont, in the hills near Aix.

The riches endure. Almost every village has its Roman remains, its ruined fortress, its chateau (many as splendid as those of the Loire Valley, and more numerous). Many others have fine old houses converted to museums full of arts and handcrafts, folklore and archaeological finds. In all of these treasures Provence is richer than the rest of France, richer in fact than any comparable area of Europe.

Aix, Avignon, Arles—each a human-sized town packed with beautiful things, each with its own character, customs, pace and distinctive countryside, more like city-states than provincial market towns. These are the centers of life: Avignon and its cafés, bustling and boisterous within its Mediaeval walls; Renaissance Aix, grave and yet, as a University town, bouyant; Roman Arles with its bullfights and fêtes, costumes and music and old ceremonies, a stronghold of tradition. They alone could fill a month of fruitful wandering. But there is so much more. Nimes, Orange, Saint-Rémy, or Vaison-la-Romaine, Frejus, Aigues-Mortes, Digne, Cassis, Grasse, and the lovely hill towns, like Vence, above and behind the Riviera—these places so little known to most tourists are just as crucial points of orientation in a Provençal itinerary. (Except for Marseille there are no large towns in Provence, and even there, in France's second-largest city, fishermen still mend their nets along the quai as they did when the Phoenician traders came, twenty-five centuries ago.)

Though the Provençal is an amiable man sipping pastis in his café or playing boules under the plane trees in the place, his house may prove as inaccessible (at least to the short-term visitor) as the Englishman's castle. But there is an entree into the interiors and the true domestic ambience of Provence—and in these relaxed off-months it is not hard to find. The pleasures of the delightfully sprawling Provençal country house with its terraces and gardens and pergolas full of flowers, with its old vaulted rooms, huge fireplaces and massive furniture, are to be found in a surprising number of small hotels, most of them converted from the stately stone houses of the 17th and 18th Centuries.

Most of these are blessed with interesting locations and with delightful far-seeing views over hills and fields to the lavender mountains or the sea. At their best they are small (10 or 12 rooms), and simple, truly of the nature of the place. Often their owners turn out to be chefs of reputation, sometimes even masters of la grande cuisine. At the least, one eats well of the fragrant regional cooking—of bouillabaisse, of local game, of Mediterranean rockfish grilled over a hot bed of vine cuttings. Well chosen, a small Provençal establishment seems more like a home than a hotel.

Most important, perhaps, these old places are so wisely placed, and spaced apart (both in town and country), that they open up to the carefree off-season traveler that rarest of travel pleasures, the opportunity to move around impromptu from one miniature world to another, yet to find himself at all times deep in the atmosphere of another world, tasting one good slice of the local life after another.

Almost every important town has one or more of these characterful inns in or near it. Across the Rhône from Avignon stand the massive feudal strongholds and the Renaissance palaces of Villeneuve, and in the maze of this picturesque old town is an ancient priory which has become an inn in the true local style, with paneled rooms full of Provençal antiques and a sheltered courtyard where one may eat magnificently (Hôtel Le Prieuré in Villeneuve-les-Avignons). One can repeat this experience—with variations—in Arles, at the Jules César, once a 17th-century convent, whose sidewalk restaurant has a lovely Carmelite chapel for background; in Aix at the Roy Renée, or the Thermes Sextius, where there are Roman baths on the grounds; in Saint-Rémy, at the Hôtel Les Antiques, an 18th-century house with painted ceilings, the original mirrors, etc.; and in Nîmes, at two modest comfortable places—the Imperator and the Cheval Blanc—which stand, respectively, near one of the loveliest gardens in France and facing a Roman arena more impressive than the one in Rome. A dozen other towns, all the way from Digne in its bowl of wooded mountains to the chic of the Riviera at Saint-Tropez or Antibes, can offer comparable delights of bed and board.

An even greater pleasure than a hotel in a Mediaeval town is an inn perched high in a hill village or lost deep in a countryside full of ruins, seeming very far from it all, yet actually within a few miles of towns, cafés, museums, etc. These, too, are plentiful; some luxurious, some modest, some very simple, but all very close to the local life and its tradition of good living.

For example, take the country auberge, once a noble stone farmhouse, called (in Provençal) L'Oustau de Baumanière, near Les Baux. Driving out of Arles, suddenly the fertile fields drop away and you are in a wilderness. Out of it appears the mighty abbey of Montmajour, an astonishing group of buildings full of the mystery of the Middle Ages; then an old mill dear to Alfonse Daudet; and then, about eight miles out of Arles, occurs one of those startling shifts of scene so common in Provence. The Alpilles appear, sheer upthrust of jagged rock, and one sees traces of prehistoric settlements. It is the Valley of Hell, weird and remote. And then the climax: one spiny ridge with the ghostly remains of a town called Les Baux, the most moving of all the great Provençal settings, the most dramatic site in France.

There are few places on earth where so much history is epitomized as at Les Baux. In the 13th Century the ruined castle was the court of the Lords and Knights of Les Baux, rulers of a great domain. Today the parched rocks and houses the color of stone show many layers of culture: a Ligurian wall, a Roman chapel, a few striking Mediaeval and Renaissance houses on wide streets, troglodyte caves. And from the high plateau a view into the very heart of Provence, one vast sweep from Cézanne's beloved Mt. Sainte-Victoire near Aix all the way west to Aigues-Mortes, the most perfect example in France of a Mediaeval walled town.

And the inn? Almost as legendary by now as Les Baux itself, it stands in the valley just outside the village—floors of Renaissance tile, vaulted rooms centered on grandiose Romanesque chimneys, Gobelin-covered chairs and that very rare bird, the owner who is his own chef and whose feeling for antiques and for interiors almost matches his reputation for food. (A dozen good riding horses make the setting complete.) This is one of the ten best restaurants in France, one reason why the demand for rooms is so heavy. (Les Baux's other hotel, the Reine Jeanne, makes a good second choice.) An overnight stay is worth the trouble of making reservations far in advance, if only on the chance of experiencing the strange magic of Les Baux by moonlight.

Rome and an old house

Though there is nothing quite like Les Baux and its inn, the hills of Provence are filled with hidden surprises and with wonderful country inns strategically placed to give the enterprising wanderer a place to start from. Thirty miles from Avignon, for instance, at Vaison-la-Romaine, is the richest archaeological find in Provence, an important Roman city carefully revealed after 45 years of excavation: houses of every class, including a great patrician villa (complete to its kitchen) decorated with mosaics, statues, paintings, and marbles; shops; a bridge; a hilltop theatre; a forum. You experience a most complete sense of the intimate life of a Roman town.

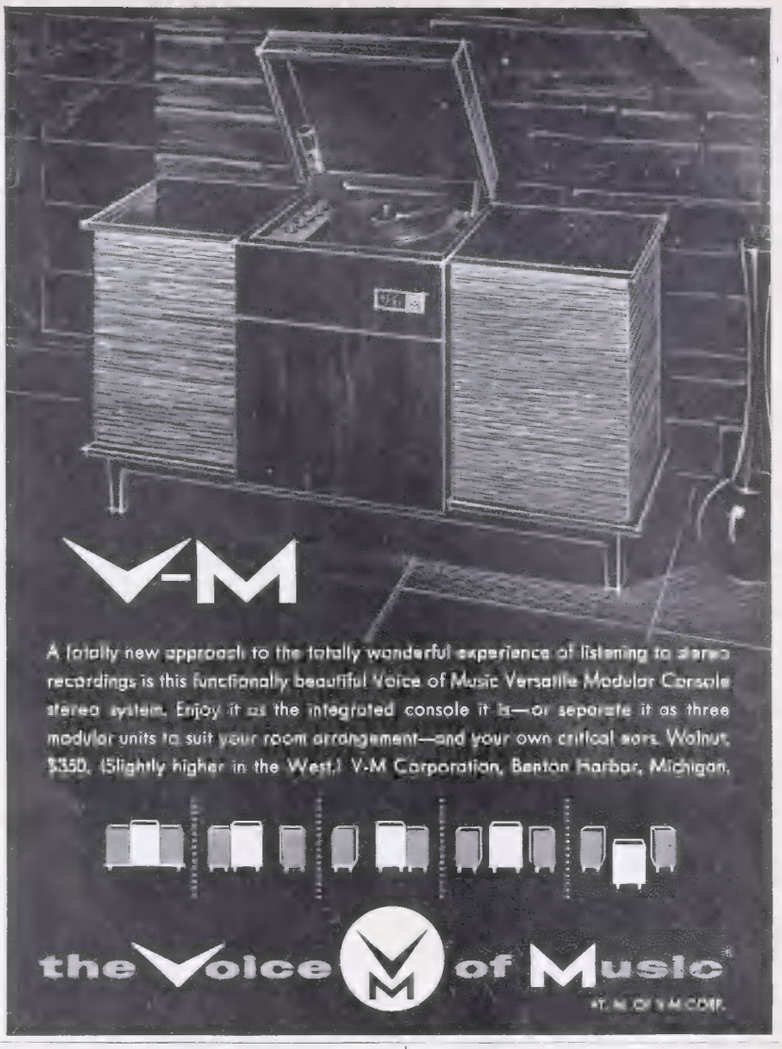
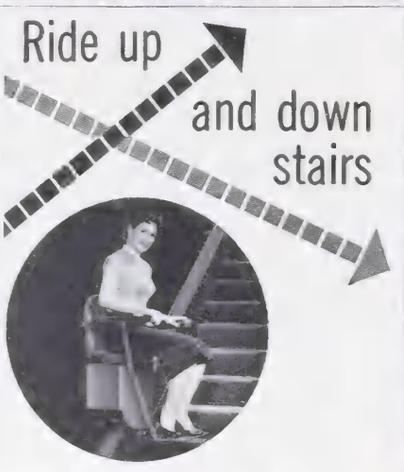
But Vaison has still more. Growing out of the ruins is the Mediaeval town, with its church dating back to the time of Charlemagne, and on the hill above, a half-abandoned Renaissance town with twisting streets full of well-restored old houses. On the rocky hilltop overlooking the River Ouvèze stands the great 14th-century Chateau of the Counts of Toulouse, and over it all rises the snow-capped mass of Le Mont Ventoux (6273 feet), in an isolated unspoiled countryside full of surprises. The day-long 85-mile circle drive from Vaison around the massif and up to its summit, with at least a dozen colorful villages along the way (see Buis-les-Barronies, Crestet, and Carpentras), is highly rewarding. On a very clear day the view from the summit sweeps clear across France from Mont Blanc to the Mediterranean.



With all this, Vaison has the Hôtel Le Beffroi, a fine old house in the steep cobbled streets of the upper town, tastefully furnished with old pieces, with a cuisine to match, and a terrace full of flowers overlooking the Roman town.



There are other small country hotels and inns like Le Beffroi, set in landscapes as different as they are enchanting. There is La Petite Auberge at Noves, in an ancient manor house, famous for its table and notable for the view and the décor. There is the Hôtel des Roches Blanches at Cassis, a surprisingly pure fishing village close to the high white cliffs and deep blue waters of the magnificent fjords known as Les Calanques. La Bonne Auberge at La Braque is a handsome, contemporary Provençal house, beautifully furnished, with a shop attached that sells the local pottery, antiques, old tiles, and old copper. It is another of the first ten restaurants of France. Next door, more or less, is a French version of the ultra-modern motel, furnished in pure Provençal style—a rare and exciting phenomenon in France.

About forty miles above Cannes in the Alpes Maritimes is the Ferme Napolèon, once an old stone farmhouse, among woods and meadows and a winding river at Le Logis du Pin. At Chateauneuf-du-Pape there are two good inns from which visits can be made to the neighboring chateaux where the great wine of that name is produced. (The excellent fruity white wine from Chateau Rayas should be included in this sampling—as should, in fact, many another wine of the small Provençal chateaux, often as good as the best but produced in too limited quantity to make a name.) And near the great Roman aqueduct called the Pont du Gard (an immense achievement, to be compared with the pyramids of Egypt) there are two more very adequate country hotels blessed with the tranquility of the back roads.

Ten miles from Aix, surrounded by its own park, is the Chateau de Meyrargues, an 11th-century chateau on a hill, luxuriously converted to a country hotel with six guest rooms and the true haute cuisine. Still another with fine cooking is the little Hôtel de-l'Etape in Le Luc-en-Provence, on the romantic hilly inland road from Aix to the Riviera.

All together there are a dozen or more sub-regions in Provence, each with its special character and charm, and there are at least three times that many of these small auberges and hostelleries and relais to make them not only accessible inside and out but also highly livable. Some others, that should be noted both for their own sakes and for the areas they make available are: La Chèvre d'Or, an eight-room inn at Eze; the Hôtel de l'Abbaye at La Colle-sur-Loup, once a venerable monastery; La Résidence in the old fortified hill town of Saint-Paul; La Réserve at Beaulieu-sur-Mer, a 30-room temple of luxury and gastronomy, renowned for its modern French décor and its tropical garden under palm trees.

A sampling of the best kitchens of Provence should include these restaurants—as much for the sake of what they reveal of the life-style as for the food itself: Le Provençal in Orange, the Abbaye de la Celle in La Celle, La Mule du Pape in Chateauneuf-du-Pape, the Philip in Vaucluse, the Isnard and the Gardanne in Marseille, the Taverne de Provence in Antibes, the Hostellerie du Lion d'Or in Vence, and on the northern approaches to Provence, the fabulous Pic in Valence-sur-Rhône and the Relais de l'Empéreur in Montélimar.

Obviously, this is a region with a high proportion of the great eating places of France. But the lust for rarefied cuisine should not be allowed to interfere with the greatest of Provence's attractions: the improvised back-country itinerary. The fact is that in almost any village inn one eats well. The best dishes, here as anywhere else, are the simple ones—filet of sole, say, or an Omelette Provençal. The true regional cooking here plays lightly with spices and sauces and concentrates on the essentials, the quality of the food itself.

It is the seafood that one does not forget, the bourride, baudrois, brandade, and bouillabaisse: and the aioli; and the melons, figs, fennel and thyme. The wines: Chateauneuf-du-Pape, Tavel, Cassis, Bellet, etc. And the berries and cherries, the peaches, pomegranates, figs, eggplant, artichoke, almonds from that great fertile garden in the delta of the Rhône. Every pleasure of the table is there—but the secret is, don't order. Ask for the specialties of the house to give the chef a chance to show what he can do.

More interiors

The second best entrée to Provençal interiors lies in the museum-houses. In an astonishing number of towns (and even of villages), one finds these surprisingly rich (yet gratifyingly small) museums, so unpretentious and so close to the original spirit of the venerable mansions and castles that house them. Paintings, costume, folklore materials, furniture, archaeological artifacts, handcrafts, etc., in handsome settings that range all the way from Aix, one of France's great museum towns, to the solitary manor house called Le Mas-Soubeyran, lost in the mountains of the Cevennes near Anduze, a 17th-century center of Protestant resistance with even its kitchen preserved intact.

Motorists driving south from Paris should plan to stop over in the important textile center of Lyon, which is celebrating its 2000th anniversary year. This is a city renowned for its restaurants, and so rich in museums as to rival Paris itself. The Beaux Arts is one of Europe's great museums. The Museum of Decorative Arts, in an 18th-century hotel, is packed with fine furniture, tapestries, objects d'art, lace, costumes, silverware and faience. The Museum of Textiles, in another elegant hôtel particulier, holds the most remarkable collection of its kind in the world: Coptic, Byzantine, and Sassanide materials; Mohammedan design from Egypt, Persia, Sicily; samples of the finest materials woven in Lyon from the 16th Century to the present, etc. And there are seven other museums, on the same high level.

Handcrafts

Until early in this century Provence was one of the more flourishing handcraft regions of southern Europe, with the emphasis on pottery. After years of decline there has been an upturn in recent years, centered on Aix, Moustiers, and the group of villages—Vence, Cagnes (where Renoir's house is now a museum), Biot, Saint-Paul, and Vallauris (stimulated by Picasso's ceramics workshop)—made known by the painters who have lived in them. (These, along with Gourdon and the dramatic Gorges du Loup, can be seen by way of the exciting mountain road that runs from Nice in a large loop through Grasse and back to the sea at Antibes, where the Mediaeval rooms of the Musée Grimaldi are filled gely with the work of Picasso.) At places like Biot one still finds old jarres provençales, the big nd pots full of geraniums that orate so much of this coast; d in the mountains east of Marlle, at Allauch and Aubagne, the ditional family industry devoted the santons (small painted clay ures) still goes on. In Marseille elf there are shops where they ntinue to make the tradition- furniture—the simple elegant irs with rush seats, for exam- , seen in Van Gogh's paintings. Perhaps the greatest pleasure of covery is to come upon one of more or less forgotten craft vil- es like Dieulefit (along a scen- back road through the moun- ns between Montélimar and ignan) where good pottery is l made, along with some tex- s and woodwork and the distil- g of lavender. In Aix (where re is a fascinating weekly auc- and an irregular "thieves" rket) and others of the larger ns there are antique shops ich remain sources of the old rk—tile, copperware, pottery.

The great art of the numerous erlapping cultures in Provence not all in the museums, nor has been frozen into a series of urist attractions." The mysteri- ruins of the Celtic-Ligurian ilization on the plateau of Entre- nt near Aix, and at Roquepert- ; the fragments of Greek settle- nts; the great arches and amphi- aters, arenas and baths and tem- s of the Romans; the skeleton Les Baux; the authentic walled ns of Avignon, Aigues-Mortes, Entrevaux; the manor houses and castles that remain so true a part of the countryside—all of this stands clear, and alive, parts of a still-living past.

The great charm of Provence's past lies in just such juxtapositions of the relics of all periods, the harmonies they form, and the day-to-day use that is made of them by a people who are loyal to their past but not in awe of it. The castles of the Rhône (as impressive as those of the Rhine); the gardens of the Pope's Palace at Avignon; the Renaissance castle at Gordes—one of the most picturesque of hill towns—with its original interior decoration intact; the church and bridge and gate and tower at Pernes; the perfectly unspoiled hill towns of Le Tricastin, far from the main roads, between Montélimar and Orange—one of the loveliest parts of Provence, yet rarely visited.

Out of all this permutation and combination of cultures, the purest essence of Provence is in the work—the scenes and the work seen together—of Paul Cézanne. In and around Aix one comes closer to him. There is his studio, just as he left it, and his house, and some of his paintings. The culmination of the experience is to walk out of Aix along the lovely road to Le Tholonet (where Cézanne walked on so many days of his life), to come to that turn of the road that so suddenly reveals the terrific presence of Mt. Saint-Victoire, and to stand where he stood (a marker shows the place) to paint this magic mountain that he made his own. Ethereal, vibrating with light, it is what Cézanne imagined it to be: the very face, the visible soul of Provence.

With one or more area rugs in a room, you must consider where people are going to walk. In other words, set up traffic lanes. People usually tend to walk on one surface only, rather than put one foot on a rug and one foot off. Therefore, it is not too difficult to show them which way to go through (or into) a room. Be sure to make lanes wide enough so you can walk easily on one surface. The space between rugs should rarely be less than two feet.

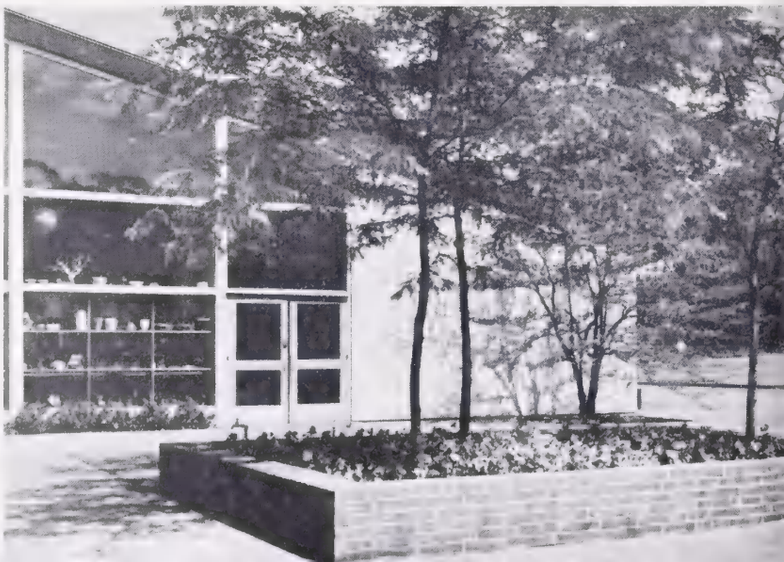
Gardens for better living

Imagine trimming grass under this clump of shad bush. The planting of pachysandra and leucothoe avoids the problem and adds a display of leaves at ground level to balance the foliage on the trees. Garden designed by Landscape Architect Allan Dalsimer for Mr. and Mrs. S. Lish.



A frame of redwood sets off this bed of yellow pansies like a picture on the terrace. Flowers heighten the orange color of the citrus fruit, and serve as a mulch to keep down the weeds. The architectural form of the raised bed gives terrace more design interest. Garden designed by Landscape Architect Thomas Church.

It would be a constant labor to maintain a lawn in this narrow space, and watering would flood the walk. But ivy grows beautifully here and the bed holds water in place. Designed by Landscape Architect Thomas Church for Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Anixter.

By CARROLL CALKINS

● Plant a ground cover at the base of a tree and you benefit the gardener, the garden, and the tree itself: You save work by eliminating the tedious chores of hand-trimming grass around the trunk and mowing where surface roots make the ground uneven. You add beauty at ground level to match or contrast with the foliage or flowers of the tree. And you start a living mulch to keep soil open for water and air, limit weed growth, and reduce surface evaporation.

If you use low evergreen ground covers like vinca, ivy, or pachysandra, about all the care they need is an annual top shearing or trimming at the edges. Flowering plants, like pansies or alyssum, require more attention but, in the long run, can also be counted as labor-savers under a tree. Your nurseryman will recommend plants vigorous enough to compete with tree roots without taking too much of their nutriment.

Base planting dramatizes small trees by setting them off sharply against a plain background. Even when flowers are out of bloom, the neat, wood-framed planting beds will stand out. Landscape architect: Thomas Church. Owners: the L. J. Phelpses.

Today it's a playground —tomorrow a garden

The short happy life of a child's play yard doesn't need to have a permanent effect on the looks of a garden. Here's one that proves it

CLAYTON STEEN, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

● The best playground, from a gardener's point of view, is one that keeps children entertained when they need it, and can be removed without a trace when outgrown. This one, at the Nathan Lufts, scores on both counts and, as a bonus, is more attractive than most. When the children outgrow the sandbox, it becomes a planting bed. Made of redwood to resist decay, it is sturdy enough to hold soil. The tanbark area is lower than the present lawn to keep the bark in place and to leave enough depth here for pebbles or brick in the future garden.

The circle of brick paving around the tree will be the focal point of a larger brick terrace which will join an existing patio beside the house. Clematis and climbing roses on the fence and a bed for flowers at its base will complete this corner of the garden, with no visable evidence that it once served heavy duty as a play yard.

Asparagus:

favorite crop for a lazy gardener

The plants you start this fall can produce for 50 years and almost take care of themselves

By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

• In England they consider the asparagus bed a lifetime investment. But, for all the agreement on its longevity and its peerless position among vegetables, there is little unanimity among the experts as to the best way to grow it.

The genus Asparagus has many species, possibly as many as 150. Some are woody shrubs; some are vines like the twining and lovely asparagus fern of the florist. A. sprengeri is an easy and satisfactory house plant; if its seed is sown in February, it will flower in fragrant pink in June and gleam with red berries at Christmas. The florist's "smilax" is Asparagus asparagoides in botanical language. Some, like our domestic species, A. Officinalis, have reduced their leaves to rudiments; those ethereal fronds are stems which have adapted themselves to the duties of leaves.

All the experts agree it will grow in most soils, including the salt and alkali soils of the West. As it is a long-lived perennial, it is best to plant it in a sunny spot behind things where it can grow undisturbed. The delicate fronds may grow eight feet tall, and make a fine background for any garden. The fat roots may delve eight feet into the subsoil, in time, and spread so wide that rows should be five feet apart and five feet from any other planting. Let that be dedicated earth after the first year; short-season crops can be grown there the first year. If you have ever tasted asparagus right from the garden, you will agree that the word "dedicated" is but slight exaggeration. Asparagus loses its natural sweet flavor almost as fast as corn. If you must pick it before the pot is boiling, stash it into the refrigerator at once. The best way to start a bed is with one-year-old roots, purchased at the seed store or greenhouse, or by mail order.

The first question is this: How deep do you set the roots?

Choose your depth, anywhere between one inch and fifteen, and I will find an authority for it. However, this afternoon I consulted what I imagine is the best of all authorities, the practice of asparagus on its own. I know a place where asparagus has volunteered from seed broadcast by a nearby cultivated bed. I dug up a couple of roots. The crowns were three inches below the surface in sandy loam on top of a little slope.

Suppose, then, that we dig our trench three inches deep. It must be a foot wide so that the roots may be spread adequately. I see no reason for digging down to place the fertilizer, for the fat roots spread horizontally over a wide area. However, do not allow chemical fertilizer or fresh manure to touch the roots at planting, for they may burn the roots and cause a little set-back.

I had long thought that it was necessary to own a manure pile in order to grow asparagus with success, but in a bulletin from one of the most famed of agricultural extension services I found this statement addressed to home gardeners: "The asparagus bed should be fertilized the same as the rest of the garden." Nothing more, nothing less.

In another bulletin from the same service addressed to truck farmers I found the recommendation to prepare the land in advance with "cover crops and manure" and, before planting, to put in a pound of 8-16-16 fertilizer for each seven crowns. The latter advised also a *p*H of 6.0 to 6.8 "at all times," and also before each cutting season a rather heavy treatment with a 10-10-10 fertilizer and, after cutting, a light dose of nitrogen. Others commend a 5-8-7 or 6-10-4 formula, so I think you might as well use whatever complete fertilizer you have around the barn.

Some say that the annual feeding should be done before cutting, some after, so why don't we agree to give half before cutting and half afterward. If you use chemicals, this means two hefty handfuls for each plant at each application. Scatter it around the plants, no closer than four inches from the stems, and dig it in an inch or two. Manure by all means, at planting and every year, if Providence has given you the means to provide it in these days of pretty packaging. "Toujours manure!" exclaimed an enthusiastic gardener, Inez Robb, in ecstasy. The same goes for compost, old sawdust, leaves that have decayed over winter, and other rotting things. A handful of bone meal along with a pint, say, of wood ashes per plant could only build increment for next harvest.

Ruth Stout, in How To Have a Green Thumb Without an Aching Back, describes a bed that requires neither fertilizer nor manure. She planted her bed in the days of the deep trench, but she has since converted to the all-organic sect. She keeps it under a deep mulch, six or eight inches of straw, hay, or leaves, and adds only lime when it is needed. This is her prescription for all of her garden and her only prescription. The mulch, continually decaying, continually replenished, provides all the richness the soil needs, she avows.

Asparagus needs lime, and the *p*H mentioned above, 6.0 to 6.8, would be satisfactory. If you do not garden in the alkali regions of the West or in hardwater country, better throw some lime into your asparagus bed. Or, better still, have the soil tested by your county agent and do what the man recommends.

Some say that asparagus does not need as much water as the majority of garden crops, but this is not unanimous. However, all the experts agree that it must have good drainage.

HOW FAR apart should the roots be placed? I would give mine eighteen inches, but a little more or less won't hurt. How many roots should you buy? I choose a dozen for each deserving person, unless you wish to freeze or can some of it. For some reason, home-grown vegetables properly frozen seem much superior to the grocery's frozen truck. Some writers recommend the Raritan or Viking varieties, and most like the Washington family, which consists of Mary, Martha, and Waltham Washington. All of these strains resist the serious disease of asparagus, rust.

The roots are reliably hardy against winter, though a sharp frost will damage the young spears. Indeed, the roots require an annual period of dormancy; in the Southwest where gardens live by irrigation and winters are mild, the gardener must bring on this dormancy by withholding water. In frostproof Florida and Louisiana asparagus is not a practical crop, for these regions have neither drought nor winter, and the roots cannot get their proper rest. Asparagus can be planted in the fall over a good part of the country, or in the deeper South in winter.

Whether you buy one-year-olds or grow them from seed (which seems to me an unnecessary labor), not until their third spring, after their second birthday, so to speak, is it wise to harvest any of the spears, and then for only two weeks. The next year and thereafter the harvest may continue for eight weeks. These limits are essential. The delicate fronds must be allowed to mature each summer in order to store food for the next year's growth. The spears are best at six inches to a foot tall.

AFTER the cherry trees bloom, keep the asparagus bed under daily surveillance—the shoots really shoot. The old-fashioned asparagus knife is useful for cutting dandelions out of the lawn, but not for asparagus. Once we spent half an hour of craftsman-careful labor cutting a mess of asparagus; now we simply break off the shoots at a suitable length, and gather the day's harvest in five minutes.

Some gardeners allow the stems to stand all winter, some cut them down and leave them on the patch as a mulch, and some delinquent ones burn them. The winter mulch is an idea, but it is better if it is heavier than stems alone provide.

Two species of asparagus beetle sometimes cause trouble, one bluish black, with a sort of Piet Mondrian marking in red and yellow. The other is bright orange with black spots. They lay black eggs on the tops, standing them on end in rows. Both the adults and the overstuffed worms, done in wet Ivy-League gray, devour the foliage. Rotenone is the tried eradicator for these. However, it is easy to knock the larva off the tops of the plants, and they never gain strength to climb back. If you can let chickens run in the patch, you have at hand the most profitable bug-destroying system. If you employ chickens, however, don't use an insecticide.

Growing good asparagus comes down to one important matter: Keep the roots well fed. This is a hungry crop. The planting is just a trifle more burdensome than planting other crops, but after that, for the next twelve or, maybe, fifty years, you may enjoy the finest of spring vegetables while Lady Nature does the work.

problem; other carpeting is laid originally with a loose fit to make re-laying after cleaning easier. A reliable carpet cleaner can take extra precautions to prevent shrinkage, but it still remains a possible source of trouble.

Even if you are lucky enough to have a high-class carpet cleaning specialist who measures it, tacks it to a frame the same size, washes and rinses it thoroughly, and power dries it, there may still be a minimum of shrinkage in your carpet. So what do you do then?

If you have not bought extra carpet for such an emergency, you can be in trouble. We think it is wiser to have a little surplus on hand—not only the scraps left from the initial laying, but a little extra yardage—saved for the numerous emergencies that arise over the seven to fifteen years carpeting lasts. Then, when you finally decide you have to send the carpet out to be professionally washed, send the extra pieces to be washed, too, so the nap and sheen will be the same. Later, when you find you have an inch or two of shrinkage, you can cut this surplus into filler strips to bridge the gap.

Some carpets have more stretch than others—from the tension used in the original weaving. Also, if the carpet was stretched to its maximum with a power-kicker when first laid, it will have no hidden slack waiting to be brought out in the laying after washing. In better-grade carpets, the full strength of a power-kicker may bring back as much as two or three inches of a shrunken rug.

The catch is: You can't be sure ahead of time about any of this. So we say, be ready with a little extra on hand for piecing and filling should the necessity arise.

How would you go about piecing the carpet? With carpet tape and a carpet glue these strips must first be butted to the old carpet before it is re-laid. Raw edges of old carpet and the new carpet should be latexed to keep them from raveling. The free side of the new strip is then affixed to the tackless strip on which the original carpet was fastened. If the carpet has some texture and depth of pile, the seams should not be apparent. Care must also be taken to see that the direction of the weave for both old and new carpeting is the same, otherwise there will be a noticeable difference.

As great a problem as cleaning is the problem of tracking. Unless you have a perfectly square room, you just can't turn a wall-to-wall carpet to compensate for a path that's been walked across it or to hide the worn spots at the doorway and in front of the couch. You may also find that carpet colors have faded in areas exposed to strong sunlight coming through modern window walls.

One way to make a tacked-down rug more mobile is to use a basic rectangle and to have the jogs in the room made up as separate pieces to be taped on. Simply untape the jogs when you want to turn the rectangle around. Another trick is to change your furniture arrangement occasionally to form new traffic lanes, thus equalizing the wear on the carpet.

With these facts of wall-to-wall life in mind, you'll be in a better position to judge whether, in your particular case, its benefits outweigh its disadvantages.

A RADICALLY NEW ACHIEVEMENT IN HIGH FIDELITY AND STEREO SOUND REPRODUCTION

STROMBERG-CARLSON NOW CREATES CONSOLES THAT REPRODUCE MUSIC AS FAITHFULLY AND FLAWLESSLY AS SEPARATELY MOUNTED COMPONENTS

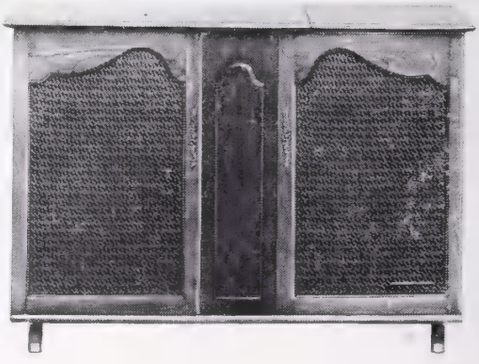
"Energy Isolation" system in new Integrity Series ensembles eliminates problems that once defied solution

The dilemma until now. For years, people selecting a high-fidelity system faced this problem: Should they accept inferior sound reproduction in a console they liked? Or should they insist on the superior reproduction of a component system, perhaps less acceptable to the eye?

Why consoles were "inferior." In a component system where speakers are physically separate from other components, sound quality depends solely on component quality. But when these same speakers and components are mounted in a console, a serious loss of sound quality results from what engineers call "feedback" and "mechanical coupling."

Simply defined, the problem is this: In a console, energy created by speaker vibrations feeds back to the other components. These sensitive units pick up and amplify it along with the music. The result is distorted and hard-to-identify—"muddy" or "boomy" sound.

"Energy Isolation" solves the problem. For many years the high-fidelity industry struggled with this problem. Now—finally—Stromberg-Carlson's electronic and psycho-acoustic laboratories have conceived and developed an unprecedented "Energy Isolation" mounting that solves it.



In the new Integrity Series component ensembles this mounting system isolates the Acoustical Labyrinth™ speaker systems in a unique cabinet-within-cabinet suspension system. Feedback and mechanical coupling disappear. Reproduction remains as pure and undistorted as high-fidelity components can produce.

Integrity Series never obsolete. Every ensemble in the Integrity Series employs exactly the same components that custom hi-fi installations use. Should new engineering developments occur, you can incorporate them simply by replacing the interchangeable components. You need never give up the cabinet of your choice.

Stereo as you want it. To suit individual tastes and room acoustics, Stromberg-Carlson's Integrity Series includes the exclusive Stereo Choice Switch. It provides any degree of sound dimensionality or separation you wish: two-channel stereo within the cabinet, two-channel stereo with an external speaker system, and three-channel stereo using the cabinet and an external speaker system.

Styled for a lifetime. As you can see, your Integrity Series ensemble can last a lifetime. To meet that challenge each of the 16 designs are authentically styled by Federico, the celebrated artist. You can choose a contemporary, traditional or period cabinet with its basic pre-selected components or with any combination of Stromberg-Carlson high-fidelity components that you wish.

Compare them to components and consoles. We urgently invite you to compare the Integrity Series with other consoles—and especially with components—for beauty of design and faithful performance. You'll find the Integrity Series at better music, department and component stores. See and hear them soon. Or write to 1424 N. Goodman Street, Rochester 3, N. Y. for a full-color catalog.

The first public offering in eight months of a magazine intended to be the most beautiful in the world:

HORIZON

A Magazine of the Arts

One year ago the publishers of AMERICAN HERITAGE issued the first copy of a new kind of magazine.

Its reason-for-being was to provide a periodical uniting art and ideas, the sum of which is culture, in a format no one had yet ventured.

What happened? To begin, more than 175,000 people subscribed. Next, the nation's press had much to say in praise of the new magazine, e.g.: "Exceptionally handsome"—New York Times; "Tasteful and opulent"—Saturday Review Syndicate; "Packed with extraordinary riches"—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

The initial demand for HORIZON far exceeded expectations. And no additional subscriptions have been invited since the turn of the year.

What does it look like? HORIZON is a big (9¼" x 12¼", 132 or more pages) bi-monthly magazine in book form—with hard covers, made to last. Its contents are permanent in value and interest. Every issue is rich with pictures, more than one-third in full color.

HORIZON is printed here and abroad by three methods on three textures of paper. No advertisements intrude. It is probably the most beautiful magazine in the world.

What's in it? HORIZON seeks to serve as guide to the long cultural adventure of modern man; to explore the many mansions of the philosopher, the painter, the historian, the architect, the sculptor, the satirist, the poet; to create a "museum without walls" for man's finest achievements in all the visual arts; to build many bridges between the worlds of scholars and the minds of intelligent readers.

To this end, a score of articles in each issue range the world and the centuries. Pictures light almost every page; jeweled reliquaries, mosaics, buildings, sculpture, miniatures, maps, lively art from cave drawings to movie palaces.

What does it cost? Each case-bound issue of HORIZON is comparable to a limited-edition book costing $10 to $15, or more. But the price is $3.95 per copy, and the annual subscription rate (6 issues) is $18.

But if you mail the coupon printed here, you'll receive the current issue before you pay anything. Then, after you have seen it, send just $1.70, followed by three monthly payments of $5.00. The total: $16.70, seven dollars less than the cost of six copies bought singly. It's a good buy; and you won't see it often. Use the coupon now.

START YOUR SUBSCRIPTION TO HORIZON FOR JUST $1.70 (PAY NOTHING NOW)

HORIZON, 551 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y.

Please send me the current issue of HORIZON as the first of six copies in a one-year subscription. After I have seen it, I'll send just $1.70, then $5.00 a month for three months. (This $16.70 rate is $7 less than the price of the same six issues if bought singly.) I understand that my subscription may be stopped at any time at my request, and the unused portion will be refunded.

Are you as up-to-date on carpets as you are on kitchens?

While you've been keeping up on the newest refrigerators and ovens, do you know what's been happening to carpets? Just as today's refrigerators and ovens have made antiques of the ones your mother used, today's carpeting, too, sets new standards of elegance, fashion and performance. Unlike the much-publicized appliance advances, the revolution in carpets has come quietly—but just as surely.

In the research laboratories of Du Pont, where nylon was invented, years of development have resulted in a carpet fiber that combines traditional warmth and luxury with practical qualities never before possible. This fiber, Du Pont Carpet Nylon, was specially engineered for carpets and makes possible rich colors, soft textures with at least double the wear of any carpet fibers in the past. Greater crush recovery means that carpeting with pile of Du Pont Carpet Nylon can be used on stairs or in other areas that get lots of family traffic, and your heaviest furniture won't leave a lasting mark. Cleaning is easier and faster because nylon fibers have no rough surfaces to trap and hold dirt.

Du Pont's Carpet Label is assurance that your carpet is made of this special nylon, and you will find it on carpets made by leading manufacturers in a wide selection of colors, styles and prices. Would you like to learn more about carpet construction, care, new weaves and textures? Du Pont has prepared a buying guide that brings you up to date on carpets and helps you make the happiest choice for your home. Ask for it at your carpet dealer's—and ask him more about Du Pont Carpet Nylon—he knows!

DU PONT

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING...THROUGH CHEMISTRY

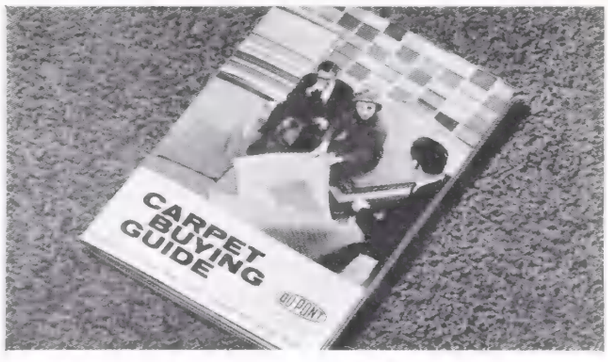
See Du Pont Carpet Nylon featured on "The Du Pont Show with June Allyson", Mondays, CBS-TV network, and the "Today" show with Dave Garroway on the NBC-TV network.

Only nylon gives you all these extras:



Outwears carpets of all other carpet fibers in similar constructions by at least 2 to 1. For all its luxurious softness, nylon is the strongest, toughest, longest-wearing fiber ever used in carpeting! And moths don't like nylon!

When you shop, look for the Du Pont label—it's your assurance of the top performance and luxury of 100% Du Pont Carpet Nylon in quality carpets . . . means you're getting the best value, dollar for dollar, year for year.

Even coffee stains can be sponged away with detergent and water. In carpet tests, nylon also proved to have greatest recovery from crushing. That means the heaviest furniture or countless footsteps won't leave lasting marks.

Du Pont's new booklet gives latest news on all types of carpeting, decorating hints, tips on care. Ask your dealer or write, enclosing 10¢, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Textile Fibers A-11047-G, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

with "Personalized comfort"

Revolutionary new Comfortorc® construction, from the House of Simmons, adjusts seating pitch automatically to persons of different weight... brings more comfort and greater durability than ever before to gracious settings.

1. PERSONALIZED SEATING COMFORT. Special rubber torque springs automatically adjust the pitch of each seating area. Separate base units in each sofa permit people of different weight to enjoy individual comfort while sitting together.

2. DOUBLE-CUSHION CONSTRUCTION gives outstanding comfort. Reversible seat cushion has Beautyrest coils, foam or foam-down. Removable base cushion has individually pocketed Beautyrest coils to distribute weight evenly; no sagging. Cushions zippered for easy cleaning.

3. COMFORTORC STEEL GRID gives extra durability and comfort. Step on the grid, bounce on it; see the strength and flexibility. Movement is two to four inches depending on weight applied. No webbing or twine to replace.

4. NO-SLIDE SPRING EDGE. Resilient spring edge, combined with action of the Comfortorc grid, creates a firm, forward seating area ... eliminates the tendency to slide forward.

5. UNITIZED STEEL & WOOD CONSTRUCTION. Unlike most upholstered furniture with all wood frame, Simmons combines wood and steel. Critical stress areas are locked to steel contour frame for maximum strength.

6. CONTOUR BACK. Steel frame members support Beautyrest coils... more coils than any other furniture ... for fatigueless, posture-perfect comfort.

7. COMFORTORC COMES in three exciting groups: Simbolic, designed by Raymond Loewy; Simcrest;® and Simtorc. Sofas, $250 to $650, custom-covered in your choice of fabrics.

Like Sterling...

Sprague & Carleton® MAPLE

As fine sterling mirrors impressions . . . so, too, your home's interior subtly reflects the warm beauty of family life.

And like sterling, your furniture in particular is chosen with care . . . as an expression of your family personality. It is for this very reason our maple is crafted so thoughtfully, to capture in each simple line, each graceful turn . . . warmth, hospitality, and harmony.

To appreciate it, you should see it . . . feel its satin-smooth finish. You'll be surprised to find such lovely solid rock maple SO REASONABLY PRICED. For your convenience we are listing below a few of the many stores where you can see Sprague & Carleton Maple.

Airfoam

the MATTRESS with a FUTURE

Here's a slumberland where serene, refreshing rest awaits everyone—the caressing comfort of an AIRFOAM mattress.

You relax on billions of tiny air cells encased in springy rubber latex. There's firm support for ALL your body's contours—for even the smallest incurves and hollows have AIRFOAM flowing in to pillow them.

And AIRFOAM—made only by Goodyear—stays baby-young itself. Year after year after year, an AIRFOAM mattress keeps full and plump. It doesn't develop that middle-sag that brings wrinkled bedspreads—annoying loose buttons—need for early replacement.

Free-breathing AIRFOAM is cooler in summer, too. Air flowing freely through all its countless passages keeps it fresh, clean, fungus-free. Its pure rubber-latex foam is a boon to sufferers from common allergies. And it never need be turned!

Only the ENGLANDER mattress is made with AIRFOAM by Goodyear. See your ENGLANDER dealer about his convincing 30-day free trial offer.

AIRFOAM-ENGLANDER TENSION-EASE FOUNDATION

ENGLANDER TENSION-EASE FOUNDATION is designed to give you firmness -- added relief from tension. It's the only firm foundation with the extra level of Tension-Ease coils. Identified by the Red-Line around the border.

TYPICAL LIGHTING IDEAS FROM LIGHTOLIER

Good light for work. The home craftsman will love Reflect-a-line. Gives a flood of light directly on his work area, an important safety factor.

Good light for reading. Lyteline hangs as easily as a picture, plugs in, spreads light up, out and down. Perfect illumination for bedrooms.

Good kitchen light. Supplement over all illumination with the bright, glareless down light of Lightolier Calculites. They make kitchen chores easier.

wonderful world of light

SEE 1960'S EXCITING LIGHTING IDEAS NOW—AT YOUR LIGHTOLIER DISTRIBUTOR

Good Lighting—Lightolier lighting—is much more than merely decorative. It does things for you and your home. It solves "seeing" problems, makes your rooms lovelier, your living pleasanter, your chores easier. Your Lightolier distributor is celebrating Lightolier Month with a dramatic array of exciting 1960 ideas in lighting from our Wonderful World of Light. For instance, you'll see the Esprit fixture illustrated above, a new kind of "design-it-yourself" lighting. It offers a choice of five pendants, three different kinds of walnut "spreaders". You compose your own one, three or six light fixture, hang your lights high or low, evenly or in a random pattern. Or take the Traveller fixture, far left above. It glides across the ceiling to follow your table, spreads good light up, down, all around. The wicker-cage pendant fixture above left is a dramatic decorating note, leaves table tops clear. All on view at your Lightolier distributor. For a free "how-to-do-it" brochure, write Dept. HB-109, Lightolier, Jersey City 5, New Jersey.

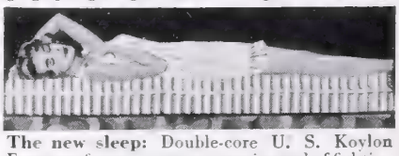
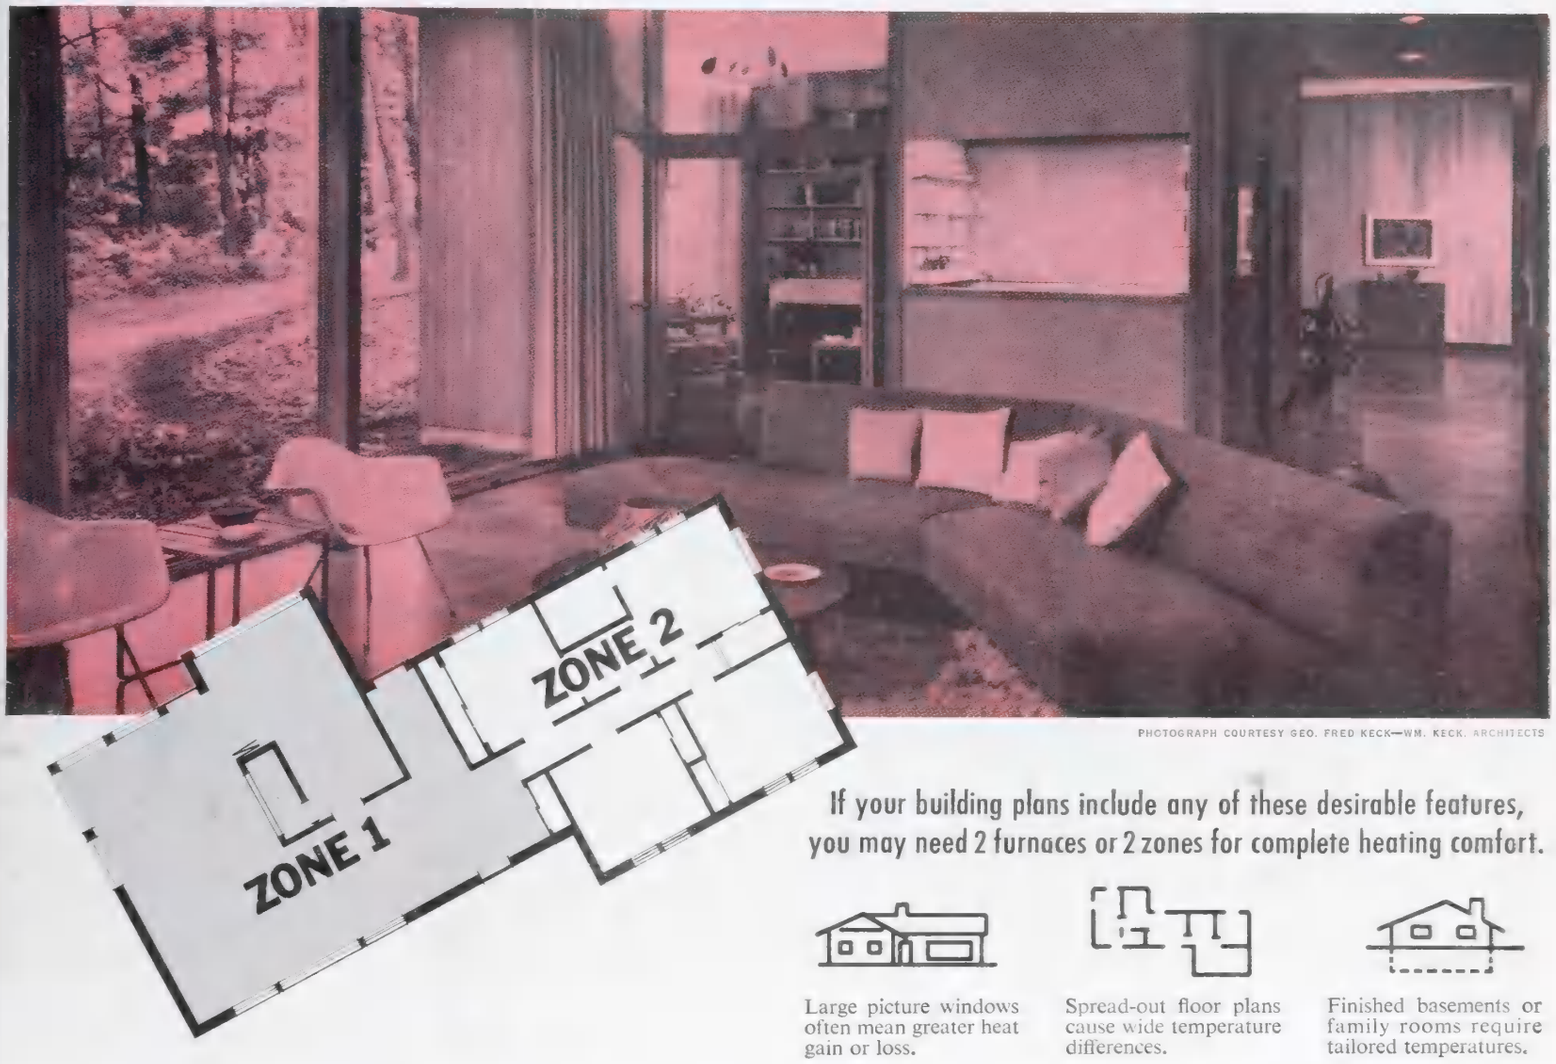
You sit on foam and you love it...now sleep on foam



Just make sure it's U.S. KOYLON the platinum label in foam mattresses

For the same reason you love to relax on that big foam chair and catnap on that foam sofa of yours, you'll also love sleeping on foam. Magical foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them the way conventional mattresses do. But you should know that not all foam makes equally good mattresses. Shun cheap foam like the plague. Better yet, specify U. S. Koylon,® finest of all foams. Uniquely constructed small core, double-core Koylon gives a totally new kind of gentle but firm straight-line support to every weary inch of you. It assures lasting firmness and much better ventilation. Non-allergenic Koylon is cleaner, cooler, fresher the year 'round. Of course it costs more to make foam mattresses this way, but it's worth it, as you'll soon discover in the world's most luxurious sleep. Prices for twin-size Koylon mattress and matching boxspring start at 129.50.

The old sleep: Ordinary mattresses resist the contours of your body, make it hard to relax, keep muscles tense supporting your weight. Sagging springs, rigid metal stuffings disturb sleep.



The new sleep: Double-core U. S. Koylon Foam conforms to your curves instead of fighting them. Every inch of you gets firm straight-line support. And you relax all over in luxurious sleep.

For ideal comfort in quality homes...

PHOTOGRAPH COURTESY GEO. FRED KECK—WM. KECK, ARCHITECTS

If you're planning a new home that will be larger than most, and have certain desirable features, you probably will be a lot more comfortable with zone control heating. This means dividing your home into two or more comfort zones, each with its own thermostat and heat supply. With such a system, you simply set either thermostat to fit your mood or activity. For example, you can have one section cool for sleeping children, another area warm, for entertaining.

Comfort zoning can be accomplished in three ways: (1) two furnaces, each serving a separate comfort zone controlled by its own thermostat (2) one furnace serving two or more zones, each with its own thermostat and (3) one boiler serving two or more zones by means of separate water valves or circulators controlled by separate thermostats.

Although Honeywell does not make heating equipment, we do make the world-famous controls that assure dependable, economical performance. Most familiar is the Honeywell Round thermostat, first choice of four out of five homeowners.

If your building plans include any of these desirable features, you may need 2 furnaces or 2 zones for complete heating comfort.

Large picture windows often mean greater heat gain or loss.

Spread-out floor plans cause wide temperature differences.

Finished basements or family rooms require tailored temperatures.

Rooms over garages often need extra heating or cooling.

Split-level homes are a puzzle for one thermostat to control.

Living and sleeping areas often require different temperatures.

See your heating dealer! Not all homes need zoning. Your heating contractor can give you expert, dependable advice. After studying your needs, he may recommend only one furnace; or one furnace with two or more zones, each having its own thermostat. For hot water systems, your dealer may advise one boiler with one, two, or more comfort zones and thermostats; in some cases, two small boilers. Whatever your needs, trust him on any question of heating or cooling.

THE AMERICAN IDEA

In the growth of our country, in products of man and of nature—lies a vast wealth of inspiration for decorative fabrics for the home. Celanese calls this treasure The American Idea. It is now translated by America's fine fabric makers into beautiful new colors, textures and designs for your home.

On the following pages you will see The American Idea fabrics made possible by another great American Idea...Celanese contemporary fibers; Celanese acetate, the beauty fiber, Celaperm "sealed-in" color acetate, Fortisan super-fine rayon and Celaire acetate carpet fiber.

Celanese Corporation of America, N.Y.

Celanese® Celaperm® Celaire® Fortisan®

Celanese contemporary fibers

THE AMERICAN IDEA

. . . the pursuit of beauty, indoors and out. Daisies in a Williamsburg garden bloom on lustrous semi-sheer draperies made with Fortisan. Celanese acetate gives texture to the handsome upholstery on the tailored ottoman.

JOFA'S hand print drapery fabric of Fortisan super-fine rayon, 4 colors. Upholstery fabric of viscose and Celanese acetate, in 7 smart colors. Available at W. & J. Sloane, New York and branches; Jordan Marsh Company, Boston; Suniland Furniture Co., Houston; Dayton's, Minneapolis; Woodward & Lothrop, Washington, D. C. More stores listed on page 43. Also available through your decorator. Cabin Crafts' "Prairie Sunrise" carpet of Celaire acetate and nylon. Furniture by Dunbar. Celanese Corporation of America, New York 16, N. Y.

Celanese® Celaire® Fortisan®

Celanese contemporary fibers

THE AMERICAN IDEA

. . . the golden glow of afternoon by the sea. Here, a beach house color scheme reflects those sunlit tones—the floating draperies made sheer with super-fine Fortisan, the upholstery deep-textured with Celanese acetate.

LEHMAN CONNOR'S drapery sheer of silk and Fortisan super-fine rayon. Bench upholstery of Celanese acetate, viscose and cotton. Chenille textured upholstery on chair of Celanese acetate, rayon, cotton. All in superb colors. At W. & J. Sloane, New York and branches; Jordan Marsh Co., Boston; The J. L. Hudson Co., Detroit; Suniland Furniture Co., Houston; John Wanamaker, Philadelphia. More stores on page 43. Also available through your decorator. Cabin Crafts' "Basketry" rug of Celaire acetate, Acrilan acrylic and nylon. Furniture by Dunbar.

Celanese® Celaire® Fortisan®

Celanese contemporary fibers

THE AMERICAN IDEA

...a melting pot of varied ideas, shown in fabrics in a New England home. Draperies are gossamer sheer, they're made with super-fine Fortisan. For contrast, Celanese acetate gives this medallion upholstery a nubby bouclé texture.

COHAMA'S floral print on rayon, silk and Fortisan rayon. Medallion bouclé slubbed upholstery of rayon, Celanese acetate and cotton. In superb colors. At W. & J. Sloane, New York and branches; The Denver Dry Goods Co., Denver; American Furniture Company, El Paso, Texas; Barker Bros. Corp., Los Angeles; Dayton's-Schuneman, St. Paul. More stores on page 43. Katherine's "Texture Twist" carpet is made of Celaire acetate and nylon. Furniture from American Design Foundation "Collection." Celanese Corporation of America, New York 16.

Celanese® Celaire® Fortisan®

Celanese contemporary fibers

THE AMERICAN IDEA

...a towering modern skyline. For dramatic contrast, a design of old fashioned hardware on casements made wonderfully sheer with super-fine Fortisan. The upholstery fabrics have the "sealed-in" color beauty of Celaperm acetate.

SCHUMACHER'S *print casement of spun rayon and Fortisan rayon. Jacquard textured damask on bench of spun rayon and Celaperm acetate. Textured jacquard homespun on chair, Celaperm acetate, viscose, cotton. In superb colors. W. & J. Sloane, N. Y. & branches; The J. L. Hudson Co., Detroit; Suniland Furn. Co., Houston; Meier & Frank, Portland, Ore.; Famous-Barr Co., St. Louis. More stores, pg. 43, Also from decorators. Cabin Crafts' "New Hope" rug of Celaire acetate, Acrilan acrylic, nylon. Three ways to improve the looks of a lamp post

The taller the lamp, the more it spreads the light. But a tall post may look too bare. You can make it decorative in itself, grow a vine on it, or screen it out with shrubbery

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

Here's height without ungainliness. Concrete base gives lamp a solid foundation, literally and visually. The length of the crossed two-by-fours adds mass to the post, but interspaces and angled ends keep it from being too heavy in appearance. Light is spread wide by the protective cover. Designer: Garrett Eckbo.

PHOTOGRAPH BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

You don't see the tall slender post supporting this electric lantern. It is screened by planting at the base. The shrub in foreground is oak-leaf hydrangea, which is especially handsome at night with light on the broad leaves and flat clusters of white flowers. If the location of post makes year-round screening important, use evergreens at the base. This is in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Boardman.

PHOTOGRAPH BY PAUL J. PEART

The classic solution, and a good one, is to grow a vine on the post. This is Hahn's ivy (small-leafed variety of English ivy), but any hardy evergreen climber would serve. Note the stone base which serves to shorten the length of the pole and relate it to the house beyond.

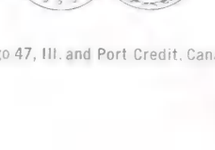
ADMIRAL

ANNOUNCING NEW 1960 ADMIRAL WIDE ANGLE 23 INCH TV*



The first TV with squared corners like a movie screen! Now see all the picture the stations send out—20 square inches more than 21-inch TV in a cabinet slimmer than ever before.

This brilliant new Admiral picture tube was especially created to bring new clarity and brilliance never before possible on a TV screen. There is no external plastic or glass plate in front of the tube to dim the picture, catch dirt and reflections. An optic filtered safety-glass is lifetime-sealed to the picture tube. Ends dirt and reflection headaches forever! And, unlike old-fashioned TV, the picture is not recessed four inches back in the cabinet. It's right out front. Now for the first time you can see the entire picture from anywhere in the room.

New Admiral SON-R wireless remote control, too. No cords, transistors or batteries. Ultrasonic sound turns TV on-off, changes channels in either direction, adjusts volume to four levels. All this plus a 5-year written warranty on Admiral's Etched Circuit boards. They eliminate 105 potential trouble spots found in ordinary TV. See 1960 Admiral today.

How Frank Lloyd Wright Used Music

He considered it a way to enlarge and enrich life and the imagination

By CURTIS BESINGER

• Some men are content to live upon bread alone as their staff of life, but Frank Lloyd Wright required more than bread. He nourished his spirit and imagination not only upon works of art that he made an integral part of his environment, but upon the sound of music, also an essential element in this environment.

Music is as much a part of the atmosphere of Taliesin as the stones in its walls, the landscape surrounding it, the flowers blooming in its garden, or the quiet murmur of life.

To some people music is a kind of background hubbub. To them it does not matter too much what the music is, be it classical or rock and roll. What does matter is that it is there filling the frightening void of their own empty lives. Heard but not listened to.

To other people music is a kind of sacred "object," something apart from their life. They regard it and listen with reverential awe either in concert halls as performed by professional musicians or as a sort of private ritual in their own living rooms as recorded and reproduced.

But to Frank Lloyd Wright music was not a supporting background noise, not a thing apart. Music was woven into his life . . . an active part of it. He knew it always as a part of his life. He had gone to sleep as a child with the sound of Bach or Beethoven in his ears, played by his minister musician father. He had been taught by his father to play the piano and the viola and to "see" symphony as an edifice in sound.

As a boy, he had spent his summers in the valley which was later to become his home. It was a valley saturated with the faith and hymns of his Welsh ancestors. He had encouraged his own children to learn to play some musical instrument as a part of their education. He continued his own music

(Please turn to page 50)

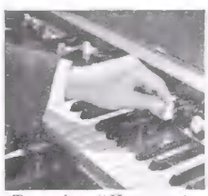
Musical instruments of all kinds were ever-present in the Wright households. Harps, harpsichords, virginals, grand pianos, concert pianos appeared everywhere. On foreign trips Mr. Wright would buy strange primitive instruments unknown in America and learn how to play them later. The Fellowship could perform with as many as 20 instruments.

For the music that keeps you young in spirit...

Choose today's most creative musical instrument...the HAMMOND ORGAN

...music's most glorious voice



Most creative instrument because...

You can command thousands of tones, and blend them as easily as an artist blends colors—only on the Hammond Organ. This immense range of beautiful tones is made possible for you by Hammond's exclusive "Harmonic Drawbars."

You can play unusual percussion effects simply by changing touch on the keys—only with the Hammond Organ. Hammond's exclusive "Touch-Response Percussion" lets you bring percussion in and out from one note or chord to another.

You will never have tuning problems interfere with your playing—on the Hammond Spinet Organ. For the Hammond Spinet has "Permanent Pitch." This is made possible by Hammond's unique tone generating system, which keeps the organ permanently in tune.

NEW! HAMMOND PlayTime PLAN! Rent a Hammond Organ and learn to play at modest cost. For complete details, just mail the coupon today.

You get this beauty only in a genuine oak floor

You'll love living with the smart, patterned style of a Bruce Block Floor. Here is beauty that's real ...natural wood grain which stands out from all imitators.

You'll get more than just beauty in Bruce Block Floors. An exclusive finish, developed and patented by E. L. Bruce Co., is applied at the factory. This finish defies wear. It preserves the beauty of your Bruce Floors for a lifetime, makes housekeeping a lot easier.

If you're remodeling you'll give special thanks for this prefinished feature because it saves time and mess of sanding and finishing floors after they're laid.

Both Bruce Laminated Blocks (specially designed for use over concrete) and Bruce Unit-Wood Blocks can be easily installed. They're laid just like tile in an adhesive, or nailed to a wood subfloor. Ask your architect, contractor or lumber dealer about Bruce Block Floors. You'll be surprised at how little they cost. Write for color literature.

Easy to lay—Bruce Blocks may be installed with an adhesive over any smooth surface or nailed to a wood subfloor or old floor.

making, deriving great satisfaction from improvisation, which he referred to as "letting the piano play itself."

His statement, made in a jesting spirit to Carl Sandburg, "If my mother hadn't decided for me that I was to be an architect, I should have been a very great musician" could perhaps have been true. He felt a great kinship between music and architecture and believed that "the mind required for greatness in either art is the same." He saw in music the same abstract qualities found in architecture. He saw their common pattern in "the striving for entity, oneness in diversity, depth in design, repose in the final expression of the whole. He saw their common elements in "planned progressions, thematic evolutions, the never-ending variety in differentiation of pattern, integral ornament always belonging naturally enough to the simplest statement of the prime idea upon which the superstructure is based."

It was because of these feelings and beliefs that music-making came to be one of the dominant activities in the daily life of the Taliesin Fellowship, the group of apprentices in architecture who worked and studied under his guidance. The young man or woman who came to Taliesin with some previous training in music was encouraged to continue it. The person with no previous experience was encouraged to make a start, so that he might know music actively instead of only passively.

The uninformed sightseer in a visit to Taliesin could have easily mistaken it for a school of music. He could hear sounds of rehearsal throughout the day. Although times of rehearsal could change to meet the requirements of other work in progress, in the studio or in the actual construction activity, the day might include a chorus rehearsal immediately after breakfast, an orchestra rehearsal after lunch, and a dance rehearsal in the evening after dinner. It would also include, tucked in at various times during the day, individual practice sessions and the rehearsal of smaller ensemble groups. It could include the sound of singing, of a violin or a cello, of a flute or a recorder, of a piano or a harp.

The immediate objective of the rehearsal was not the public performance of the music but the personal enlargement and enrichment of the life and imagination of the performer, and the development of an awareness of the common elements of design in music and architecture.

As Frank Lloyd Wright himself went to a "delightful and inspiring school" when he listened to music, particularly that of Beethoven, he felt the apprentice, without being particularly aware of it, should learn the design qualities of good music. During his apprenticeship the young architect, either through hearing or in his own reading and participation, became acquainted with a large portion of the musical literature of the world.

Since the goal was not the same quality of performance that might be expected of a professional musician, there was an opportunity to explore a wider area of music than would otherwise have been possible. Those who sang in the chorus—and many did because it is a form of musical activity for which most people have at least the necessary rudiments and from which they can easily gain some satisfaction—became familiar with very early religious music: the rich polyphony of Vittoria, Palestrina, Schütz and others of this peak of song; the work of Bach and Brahms; the pleasures of Gilbert and Sullivan; the simple depths of folksongs, cowboy songs and spirituals.

Dependent upon their particular instrument and their ability, groups of apprentices would explore the pleasures of ensemble and chamber music, including the simple folktunes and dances arranged for recorders, and the trios and quartets of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. The orchestra played Mozart, Vivaldi, Borodin, and other composers whose works came within their ability and instrumentation. Individuals played some of the sonatas of Beethoven, Mozart, Bach, Vivaldi, Brahms, for piano, violin, and flute.

OFTEN members of the Fellowship would devote extra time and energy to the preparation of some solo or ensemble composition as a special contribution to some particular event in the life of the Fellowship. For Mr. Wright's birthday, it might be a cello sonata, an instrument of which Mr. Wright was particularly fond. It might be a chorus number for Christmas or Easter.

The apprentice who did not actively participate in the playing of music still came within its influence. Music was a part of the social life of the Fellowship. Each Sunday evening the Fellowship would gather together, either in the living room or theater, for dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Wright and guests. Dinner was generally followed by a varied program of music. It would include several numbers sung by the chorus, several numbers played by the ensemble or orchestra and several by individual soloists. It might also include the more finished performances of musicians who were guests only for the evening or who were staying for longer periods of time.

Although Mr. Wright greatly enjoyed the polished performance of the professional, he was wary for fear that their presence and reliance on their ability might encourage the members of the Fellowship to become lax in their own music-making activity, and to become passive in their musical interests instead of using it as an inspiration and a means for developing their own ability.

Not only was music a part of the daily life of Taliesin, audibly, but provision for it was planned by Mr. Wright in all of its main living spaces; a grand piano occupied an important position in all of the living rooms. Seating arrangements for small ensemble groups were a part of the furnishings of some rooms. In the several theaters which were a part of Taliesin in both Wisconsin and Arizona and which housed a part of the social life of the Fellowship a grouping of furniture for music-making is always a part of the design.

Mr. Wright did not rely entirely on the music-making activities of the Fellowship for his musical nourishment and sustenance. Both Taliesins contained a rather large library of recorded music. At Taliesin in Wisconsin speakers were not only incorporated into the architecture of the rooms, but one was placed outdoors in the garden and both early in the morning or late in the evening the sound of music added its particular quality to the environment, making it seem much richer and more serene.

Concrete Masonry pylons add their spectacular note of shadow and substance in this handsome home in the Southwest.

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

AND THE BEAUTY OF BLOCK. In his hands, block was plastic—to sweep in graceful curves or loom in majestic ruggedness. In his hands, block showed a practical face to the elements outside and a warm and cheery composure to the occupants inside. In his hands, the uncommon beauty of a common building material gave another new dimension to his theory of organic architecture. We offer here, in recognition, a smattering of his work with block.

NATIONAL CONCRETE MASONRY ASSOCIATION, 1015 WISCONSIN AVENUE, N.W., WASHINGTON 7, D.C.

The horizontal sweep, typical of many Wright designs, gets added emphasis from the raked mortar joints of this block wall.

A graceful curve softens the massiveness of this fireplace built of standard masonry units and gives a sense of movement to the room.

Whether inside or out, the natural beauty of block and the touch of this remarkable man, joined to produce designs of intriguing beauty.

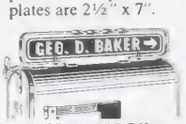
from coast to coast in America's finest residential areas you see more DAY-n-NIGHT® Markers than any other kind of house marker

Perfect gifts for Christmas because they're personal Gift card free on request

People who can afford any type of home identification choose low-cost DAY-n-NIGHT Markers. Good taste, simple design and honest craftsmanship have made DAY-n-NIGHT Markers America's favorites from coast to coast!



ANY WORDING YOU WANT*

Your name or other wording appears on both sides of your DAY-n-NIGHT Marker in permanent, embossed reflector letters that shine brightly in headlights, softly in moonlight.

DAY-n-NIGHT Markers are rustproof; plates, frames, etc., are made of lifetime aluminum throughout. Baked enamel automobile finish; black background, white letters. The letters are permanent — raised in solid aluminum plates. Nameplates are 2½″ x 18″; number plates are 2½″ x 7″.

You can order any wording you want, up to 17 letters and numbers on nameplates, 6 on number plates. Same wording appears on both sides.

COLOR! The background on any DAY-n-NIGHT Marker can be made in your choice of Antique Copper, Colonial Red or Pine Green for only 50¢ per Marker extra. The colors are baked enamel automobile finishes, with the same brilliant white reflecting letters as black-and-white styles.

DUCK BOWL. This is a fine example of original and excellent handiwork. Your husband might use it on his desk as a man-size ash tray or to hold clips. European walnut with beautifully detailed carving, it's hand-rubbed to a furniture polish. Copies of museum-pieces, no 2 alike. 10" over all from beak to tail. $3.95 or 2 for $7.75. Downs & Co., Dept. 1110. Evanston, Ill.

NESTING BASKET TRAYS are marvelous for Sunday-night buffets, TV dining; to heap with fruit as a holiday centerpiece. Or you may use one to hold magazines in the hall, mail on a desk. Nest of six rattan-type baskets imported from China range from 15" long, 11½" wide to 10¼" long, 6½" wide. $6.95. Order from Mr. Shaw, 214 West Ontario St., Chicago 10, Ill.

A LOTUS BOWL, as pretty as the blossom, holds a long-burning candle (it lasts 40 hours) to shed enchantment over a table set for two, a terrace tête-a-tête, an anniversary celebration. Bowl doubles as a dish for nuts, candies, cigarettes, is 5¼" x 3¼" high on black wood stand. $1.95 plus 25c post. Artisan Galleries, 2100 N. Haskell, Dallas, Tex.

WHISK BROOM-SHOEHORN. The monogrammed handle is a shoehorn, and it solves so many gift problems for those problem men that it should be called a Whiz Broom. For inexpensive Christmas or birthday presents, it's wonderful. In gleaming 18k goldplate with 3-letter engraving, it has nylon bristles. $1.98. Vernon Specialties, HB-10, 276 E. 3rd St., Mt. Vernon, N.Y.

EXOTIC LOUNGING BOOTS - $2.98

Harem Lounging Boots add cozy enchantment to whoever wears 'em. Exotic looking and fantastically comfortable! Lustrous quilted rayon satin in rich jet black or vivid red. "I HAVE A SON I'VE NEVER SEEN"*

"I have a son that I have never seen, whose language I do not speak and who does not understand mine.

Today, and every summer day, tourists from many lands throng the town of Delphi in Greece. They come to view those scenes made sacred through literature and history. Near this town lives my son Nikolaos.

In my mind's eye I see him now, walking those well worn paths, climbing the craggy hills, attending the quaint old school. I see him visiting the old, battered, bullet-scarred church. I see him going home to the tiny one-room house where he lives with his mother and sister. In my imagination I step through the door. I see the one hard bed, the crude table and bench, the battered box that serves as a chest and the make-shift stove. I count the ornaments of the place—a few flowers in a tiny jug and love. The young mother works, when there is work, as a laborer on a nearby farm. The work is heavy and the hours are long. She is paid ten dollars a month. One fifty of this she pays for rent.

There was a war. Remember? War took this child's father and made him my son. I am proud of him. His frequent letters in the characters of his own tongue are, when translated, the most beautiful literature I can read. I am proud of him.

In our world today there are millions of boys and girls who through war and horror have lost one or both parents. These children know no real home. They never have enough to eat. They have no proper clothes. They share but little love. They have no medical attention. There is no provision for their education. They have no future as we understand that term.

There is in our country an organization known as The Foster Parents' Plan. Through this Plan you may adopt one of these children. You may make yourself responsible for the health and education of one these little ones. You may become a father or a mother in reality. You may know the joy and satisfaction a child's letters bring. You can know that somewhere in the world a child's prayers, on your behalf, rise like sweet incense to the Infinite. And you can see in your own life how they are answered."

* Written by Foster Parent Roland Porter about his "adopted" child.

You alone, or as a member of a group, can help these children by becoming a Foster Parent. You will be sent the case history and photographs of "your child" upon receipt of application with initial payment. "Your child" is told that you are his or her Foster Parent. At once the child is touched by love and a sense of belonging. All correspondence is through our office; is translated and encouraged. We do no mass relief. Each child, treated as an individual, receives a monthly cash grant of eight dollars plus food, clothing, shelter, education and medical care according to his or her needs. Your help is vital to a child struggling for life. Won't you let some child love you?

Plan is a non-political, non-profit, non-sectarian, government approved, independent relief organization, helping children, wherever the need—in France, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Western Germany, Korea and Viet Nam—and is registered under No. VFA019 with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the United States Government and is filed with the National Information Bureau in New York City. © 1959 FPP Inc.

This is Chaumont...graceful symmetry to bid you gently to sleep

French Provincial Elegance

KLING MEANS SOLID MAPLE • CHERRY • MAHOGANY

As charming as a sunny morning in the French provinces, these two new French Provincial groups by Kling will bring warm and classic beauty to your bedroom. Look long at Chatillon and Chaumont ...imagine this fine furniture yours.

Each graceful group is available in Parisian White with soft highlights and tasteful gold accents (as seen in lovely Chaumont above) or the subtle interplay of grain and carving revealed by Ancestral Tan (like Chatillon below).

Each Parisian White piece is crafted of SOLID Northern hard maple, while the Ancestral Tan finish is used only on SOLID native wild cherry. Both groups, both finishes, are handsome proof of what skilled Kling craftsmen can create from carefully chosen fine hard woods. See them...soon.

For helpful bedroom decoration and furniture care suggestions, send 35¢ (coins, please) for 24-page, full-color booklet. Kling Factories, Dept. HB-10, Mayville, N. Y.

Chatillon...noble French elegance, borrowed for your bedroom

Designed by Carl Eggebrecht

you'll sleep better if you know it's got this tag

A blanket with this tag takes a load off your mind. It washes and dries by machine . . . yet it stays fluffy, always tucks deep, ends shrinkage problems! (In fact, it's the only blanket of its kind to win the American Institute of Laundering Seal.) A blanket with this tag takes a load off your shoulders. It feels remarkably light, yet laboratory tests prove it's warmer, ounce for ounce, than ordinary blankets. It's moth- and mildew-resistant too, and non-allergenic. And to make it clear what you're getting, it's tagged Winterweight, Mediumweight, or Lightweight. In solid colors, prints, and novelty weaves. You'll sleep better (so will your family) if your blankets are 100% virgin Acrilan.* You're sure when you see this tag.

COPPER COCKTAIL SHAKER

The old fashioned milk can goes modern—serves cocktails, also milk and cream! And when the party's over, what a distinctive ornament it makes, with its bright copper gleaming on wall, shelf or sideboard! Inside, it's completely lined with tin, to preserve the full flavor of drinks and make it a cinch to rinse clean. 8½" tall overall, makes 6 to 8 cocktails. An outstanding gift for any occasion . . . looks like far more than this low price!

STEREO Hi-Fi AND MATCHING TELEVISION

in cabinets from the Drexel® Touraine collection

We took the ageless elegance of French Provincial styling . . . entrusted it to the skilled hands of modern furniture craftsmen . . . to bring you this masterpiece of outstanding charm and grace.

As a beautiful commode, this Touraine 3-Channel Stereo High Fidelity brings high-styled flattery to any room decor. In use, a touch swings end-panel speakers forward to flank the center speaker . . . and the room is filled with "wall-to-wall sound".

As exclusive as this styling achievement is Motorola's new advance in sound: authentic 3-Channel Stereo Hi-Fi using 3 separate amplifiers, 3 separate speaker systems. You can play all Stereo records, as well as every other record you own. Has FM/AM radio.

Motorola® TV, too, comes in matching cabinet, with sliding tambour doors to conceal controls. And with exclusive Golden Satellite* IV remote control you direct your TV's every function from across the room.

For new full-color 24-page decorator brochure—showing 18 ways to use Stereo Hi-Fi and TV in contemporary, Provincial, and traditional room settings—send 50¢ to Motorola Inc., Dept. T-2, 4545 W. Augusta Blvd., Chicago 51, Illinois.

IN SOLID ROCK MAPLE

it speaks so well of you . . .

The glowing grandeur of solid hard rock mountain maple was never more heart-warming than in these Colonial re-creations by Empire. Authentically styled, masterfully crafted and enduringly finished in a soft Spice Brown. The finish, as with all Empire furniture, is scratch-resistant, and the color grows richer as the years go by. Pieces shown are from Empire's complete collections for bedroom, dining room and living room. Solid Cherry collections are also available. Furniture of this heritage and quality speaks well of you—yet the price is surprisingly low for such a lifetime investment in good living.

Deep-drawered chest and night tables complement this authentic low spindle bed, available in single or double bed size.

This hutch-buffet combination has storage space galore. So functional, so practical and so beautiful in your home.

A-HUNTING WE WILL GO, and whether you bag a deer in the Maine woods, or hook a flounder off Cape Cod, this super-strong Norse King Knife will serve you well. Cutting-edge is sharp enough to cut through a coin, blade bends to 90° without breaking, is triple laminated. Swedish birch handle. 8½" long, $2.25. Empire, HB-10, 4 No. Third Ave., Mt. Vernon, N.Y.

GOOD MIXER is this birchwood hand-finished mortar and pestle from Italy. Gourmets treat it as they would a fine salad bowl to retain the slight but important suggestion of garlic and herb-blended vinegars. Decorators plant it with baby ivy for a colonial accent in kitchen or den. 4½" diam. with 6" pestle. $1.89 plus 25¢ post. Henry's Store, HB-10, 95 5th Ave., New York 3.

SHUTTER LATCH does the businesslike job of keeping interior shutters, louvers, folding doors, closets, cabinets firmly shut. As pretty as they are efficient, they come in gleaming brass, are easy to keep polished. Latch arm on full pivot can be mounted at left or right. 2¼" w. x 1¾" h., with screws, $1 ea. Catalogue 25¢. Mohawk Craftsmen, Box 26-HB, Athol, Mass.

DO IT YOURSELF, and fool them all with the idea that you picked this up at a bargain price, when truly you made it with your very own hands. Mosaic-tile trivet kit has brass-plated frame, Italian ceramic tiles, 8" x 8" board, cement, grout, directions. Pink and mottled-pink tiles are pretty as you please. $2.95. Glasscraft, 920B Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

the Forever-Splendor of Glass!

*Since 1608, this Rhine goblet has been brimful of wine and washed times beyond number. Hasn't shrunk, stretched, faded . . . nor been damaged by moths, sunlight, or flame. This inspired creation, an intrinsic miracle of glass, may be seen at The Metropolitan Museum of Art odern science has endowed glass with new wonders: luxurious ftness, suppleness and an indestructible resilience. Yarns of ssamer glass fibers are woven by Burlington into fabulous fabrics in an infinite variety of colors, textures, patterns, moods. The mantic beauty of glass—blended with the special service quali- s of glass—make possible for your home the most unique and citing curtain and drapery fabrics the world has ever known.

Think of it! Ironed for you forever at 1200° F. The only fabric that washes so easily, is ready to rehang in minutes (without the bother- some "drip-dry" step), is unaffected by sunlight, is absolutely fire- proof! And because it's glass . . . it's beautiful beyond compare!

No wonder most people want Crane

Look to your Crane Plumbing Dealer for help with layouts, selections and costs. Let his skills assure you the quality installation your new Crane fixtures deserve.

A case in point is the Crown lavatory, the most exciting bathroom fixture in years.

The Crown takes the purest of forms: a circle. It adapts itself beautifully to any setting. And—cleverest of all—it works from a single hand control!

That's right. Your thumb and finger alone guide the Crane Singl-ese control—up and down for water volume . . . left and right for temperature . . . ever so smoothly.

The Crown lavatory is equally at home in any countertop: plastic, ceramic or marble. Any space: it needs only 18 inches of counter. Any budget: the Crown is priced so reasonably that many of the newer bathrooms boast two.

In choosing for your own bathroom, select from seven Crane colors and white (Sky Blue is the color shown). You'll find other Crane fixtures in perfect match.

Whatever your choice, you can't go wrong; preference polls give Crane a 28% lead over any other plumbing brand. See it firsthand and we're sure you'll agree—"No wonder most people want Crane!"

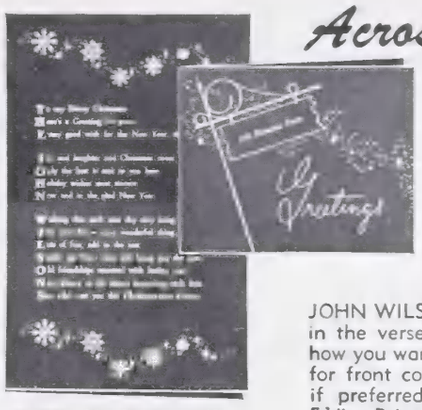
"CALEB NORTH," a superb desk for a sunny living room or pine-paneled den, is a solid knotty-pine reproduction. It's hand-finished to a mellow glow, richly Colonial in feeling, with commodious drawers and pigeonholes to please the most organized. 48" x 19" x 40", $87.50. Matching chair, $17.50. Exp. coll. Catalog 25¢. Ephraim Marsh, Box 266, Concord 3, N.C.

TRIPLE TREAT. Next time you have a party buffet style, pass out these three-in-one wonders. Knife, fork, and spoon will cut ham, eat salad, and spoon macaroni from the wobblingest knees in the crowd! Hand-buffed stainless steel and black lustrous nylon Spforkni by Gense, $3.75 each; four are $14.50. Add 50¢ post. Cardel, Ltd., 615 Madison Avenue, New York 22.



ESKIMO BILLIKEN. If you need luck, you could do lots worse than let the legendary luck of the Billiken work its magic for you. Handcarved by Alaskan Eskimos from genuine walrus-tusk ivory, it's the most famous of all their carvings; they believe that rubbing its stomach will make a wish come true. 3" h., $4.95. American Trader, Dept. 50, 31 Lafayette, White Plains, N.Y.

AN APPLE PARER turns out succulent slices all peeled and cored, ready to go into a tasty, bubbling pie. And it saves so much time and mess, as you simply turn the crank on vise-like attachment. Fits on table, simple enough for a pig-tailer to operate while you prepare the dough. And the time is ripe for apples. $3.95. Bard's, Dept. 1110, Evanston, Ill.

THIS PONY LEADS A DOUBLE LIFE

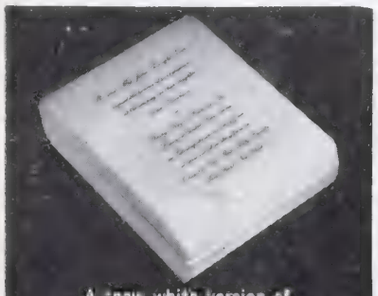
It's A Handsome Hassock . . . It's A TV Pony!

Order one for yourself and your children. It's ideal, too, as an outstanding Christmas gift.

Only $9.95, shipped prepaid. Send check or money order. Immediate delivery.

Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back.

Here's a new furniture creation the whole family will use and enjoy.



For you, it's a versatile, stylish hassock, designed and crafted to blend with modern or period furniture. When you're in a mood to relax, use this firmly-padded piece as a decorative foot-rest. When extra guests show up, use it as a sturdy, convenient seat.

For junior and his friends, just slide the pony head into the inconspicuous slot on the side and it's a TV pony. Its tough construction can take all the rough riding the young 'pony set' will give it. The kids love the realistic reins, to ride hard with their favorite TV heroes.

Upholstered in Jason Sealtuft material (the same as used in high-priced cars). TV pony hassock comes in soft black, or white, with fitted brass-tipped legs which screw into extra-strong metal sockets. Size: 22" x 12" x 17" high.

PROTECT YOUR CHILD FROM WET BEDS WITH

STAYDRY* PANTIES

Keep your child safe from the psychological disturbances caused by wet beds. Give your child the security of waking up in a dry bed. This patented all-in-one panty is day and night protection—safeguards against wet clothes and bedding.

STAYDRY Panties are comfortable and form fitting — without pins or buttons to cause discomfort — may be worn invisibly under clothes. They contain highly absorbent material with tested waterproof outer covering of fine, non-toxic, soft plastic. Washable—may even be boiled and bleached.

ECONOMICAL STAYDRY saves you time and money. Frees you of mess and fuss — of the useless expense of rubber sheets, extra sheets and enormous laundry bills.

DOCTOR APPROVED! STAYDRY is recommended by many leading doctors as the perfect solution to this distressing problem.

PERFECT FOR INVALIDS—wonderful for adults with this distressing problem. *Reg. U. S. Pat.

This gift for children is so unusual, so different—yet so practical—you'll have a hard time keeping the rest of the family from "borrowing" it. When not in use, it nests into an adorable clown 7½" tall. For use, it separates into 5 practical pieces of dishware—a plate, a deep cereal bowl, an all purpose two handled cup personalized with child's name, for milk, soup, etc., an egg cup and saucer and a salt seller. Imported porcelain, multi-color full glaze finish. An out-of-the-ordinary, practical gift that won't be duplicated. Guaranteed to delight or money back. EXCLUSIVE—not sold in stores. Immediate delivery.
